32] Cum autem indubitatum et extra controversiam positum sit, quod propria non egrediantur sua subiecta, hoc est, quod quaelibet natura suas proprietates essentielles retineat, et illae non ab una natura separentur atque in alteram, tamquam aqua de uno vase in aliud, transfundantur, nulla prorsus fieri aut constare posset proprietatum communicatio, nisi illa, de qua diximus, personalis naturaapostle testifies [Phil. 2, 7], laid it aside; and, as Dr. Luther explains, He kept it concealed in the state of His humiliation, and did not employ it always, but only when He wished.

But now He does, since He has ascended, not merely as any other saint, to heaven, but, as the apostle testifies [Eph. 4, 10], above all heavens, and also truly fills all things, and being everywhere present, not only as God, but also as man [has dominion and] rules from sea to sea and to the ends of the earth; as the prophets predict, Ps. 8, 1. 6; 93, 1 f.; Zech. 9, 10, and the apostles testify, Mark 16, 20, that He everywhere wrought with them and confirmed their word with signs following. Yet this occurred not in an earthly way, but, as Dr. Luther explains, according to the manner of the right hand of God, which is no fixed place in heaven, as the Sacramentarians assert without any ground in the Holy Scriptures, but nothing else than the almighty power of God, which fills heaven and earth, in [possession of] which Christ is installed according to His humanity, realiter, that is, in deed and truth, sine confusione et exaequatione naturarum, that is, without confusion and equalizing of the two natures in their essence and essential properties; by this communicated [divine] power, according to the words of His testament, He can be and truly is present with His body and blood in the Holy Supper, to which He has directed us by His Word; this is possible to no other man, because no man is in such a way united with the divine nature, and installed in such divine almighty majesty and power through and in the personal union of the two natures in Christ, as Jesus, the Son of Mary. For in Him the divine and the human nature are personally united with one another, so that in Christ dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily, Col. 2, 9, and in this personal union have such a sublime, intimate, ineffable communion that even the angels are astonished at it, and, as St. Peter testifies, have their delight and joy in looking into it [1 Pet. 1, 12]; all of which will shortly be explained in order and somewhat more fully.

From this basis of the personal union, as it has been stated and explained above, that is, from the manner in which the divine and the human nature in the person of Christ are united with one another, namely, that they have not only the names in common, but have also in deed and truth communion with one another, without any commingling or equalizing of the same in their essences, flows also the doctrine de communicatione idiomatum, that is, concerning the true communion of the properties of the natures, of which more is to be said hereafter.

For since this is verily so, quod propria non egrediantur sua subiecta (that properties do not leave their subjects), that is, that each nature retains its essential properties, and these are not separated from the nature and poured into the other nature, as water from one vessel into another, so also no communion of properties could be or subsist if the above-mentioned personal union or communion of ren in der Person Christi nicht wahrhaftig wäre, welches nach dem Artikel von der heiligen Dreifaltigkeit das größte Geheimnis im Himmel und auf Erden ist, wie Paulus sagt: „Rundlich groß ist dies göttliche Geheimnis, daß Gott geoffenbaret ist im Fleisch“, 1 Tim. 3. Denn weil der Apostel Petrus mit klaren Worten bezeugt, daß auch wir, in welchen Christus allein aus Gnaden wohnt, um solches hohen Geheimnisses willen in Christo „theilhaftig werden der göttlichen Natur“, was muß denn das für eine Gemeinschaft der göttlichen Natur sein, davon der Apostel redet, daß „in Christo alle Fülle der Gottheit leibhaftig wohne“, also daß Gott und Mensch eine Person ist! Weil aber hoch daran gelegen [ist], daß diese Lehre de communicatione idiomatum, das ist, von Gemeinschaft der Eigenschaften beider Naturen, mit gebührendem Unterschied gehandelt und erklärt werde (denn die propositiones oder praedicationes, das ist, wie man von der Person Christi, von derselben Naturen und Eigenschaften redet, haben nicht alle einerlei Art und Weise, und wenn ohne gebührenden Unterschied davon geredet wird, so wird die Lehre verwirrt und der einfältige Leser leichtlich irremacht), soll nachfolgender Bericht mit Fleiß vermerkt werden, welcher um besseren und einfältigen Verstand willen wohl in drei Hauptpunkte gefaßt werden mag.

Als erstlich, weil in Christo zwei unterschiedliche Naturen an [in] ihrem natürlichen Wesen und Eigenschaften untermandelt und untermischt sind und bleiben, und aber [und demnach] der beiden Naturen nur eine einzige Person ist, so wird daselbe, was gleich nur einer Natur Eigenschaft ist, nicht der Natur allein, als abgeondert, sondern der ganzen Person, welche zugleich Gott und Mensch ist (sie werde genennet [genannt] Gott oder Mensch), zugeschrieben.

Aber in hoc genere, das ist, in solcher Weise zu reden, folgt nicht, was der Person zugeschrieben wird, daß daselbe zugleich beider Naturen Eigenschaft sei, sondern [es] wird unterschiedlich erklärt, nach welcher Natur ein jedes der Person zugeschrieben wird. Also ist Gottes Sohn geboren aus dem Samen Davids nach dem Fleisch, Röm. 1. Item, Christus ist getödet nach dem Fleisch und hat für uns gelitten im oder am Fleisch, 1 Petr. 3 und 4.

Weil aber unter den Worten (da gesagt wird, es werde der ganzen Person zugeschrieben, was eine Natur eigen ist) die heimlichen und öffentlichen Sacramentierer ihren schädlichen Irrtum verbergen, daß sie wohl die ganze Person nennen, aber gleichwohl nur bloß die eine Natur darunter verstehen und die andere Natur gänzlich ausschließen, als hätte die bloße menschliche Natur für uns gelitten, wie denn D. Luther in seinem großen Bekenntnis vom heiligen Abendmahl von des Zwingels alloecosis [Zwinglis Bedeutungsverwechslung] geschrieben, wollen wir D. Luthers eigene Worte hier setzen [hierhersehen], damit die Kirche Gottes wider solchen Irrtum zum besten verwahrt werden möge. Seine Worte lauten also: „Das heißt Zwingel alloecosis, wenn etwas von der Gottheit Christi gesagt wird, daß doch der Menschheit zugeht, oder wiederum [oder umgekehrt]. Als Luth. 24: „Mußte nicht Christus lei-rum in Christo esset unio et communicatio. 33] Hoc autem (post articulum Sanctae Trinitatis) summum est mysterium, quo nullum maius in coelo et in terra reperitur. Unde Paulus ait 1 Tim. 3, 16: Manifeste magnum est pietatis mysterium, quod Deus manifestatus est in carne etc. Cum enim apostolus Petrus clarissimis verbis 2 Pet. 1, 4 testetur, quod nos etiam, in quibus Christus (tantummodo ex gratia) habitat, propter tantum mysterium divinae naturae participes sumus in Christo, quantum existimabimus eam esse communicationem divinae naturae, de qua apostolus loquitur, quod videlicet in Christo tota Divinitatis plenitudo inhabitat corporaliter, ita quidem, ut Deus et homo una sint 35] persona! Plurimum autem refert, ut haec doctrina de communicatione idiomatum convenienti discrimine et distincte tractetur et explicetur. Propositiones enim et praedicationes, quibus utimur, cum de persona Christi et de naturis et proprietatibus eius loquimur, non omnes unius sunt generis aut modi. Et si quando non satis dextre et distincte hoc negotium tractatur, tum doctrina haec [R. 770] involvitur, et lector simplex facile perturbatur. Quare ea, quam subiiciemus, explicatio alta mente reponatur; ea autem, ut res ipsa lectori planior et intellectu facilius sit, tribus praecipuis capitibus comprehendendi potest.

36] Primo, cum in Christo duae sint distinctae naturae, quae essentis et proprietatibus suis neque mutantur neque confunduntur, utriusque vero naturae una tantum sit persona, ea, quae unius tantum naturae propriae sunt, alteri naturae non seorsim, quasi separatae, sed totae personae (quae simul Deus et homo est) attribuantur, sive Deus sive homo nominetur.

38] Cum autem et occulti et aperti Sacramentarii sub hac regula (quando dicitur, quod toti personae tribuatur, quod uni naturae proprium est) perniciosum suum errorem occultent, dum totam quidem personam nominant, interim tamen unam, eamque (ut sic dicamus) nudam tantum naturam intelligunt, alteram autem penitus excludunt, quasi nuda vel sola humana natura pro nobis passa sit, placuit D. Lutheri verba hoc loco recensere e maiori ipsius de Coena Domini confessione, in quibus de Cinglii alloecosis agit, ut ecclesia Dei quam optime adversus errorem illum praemuniat. Verba autem D. Lutheri sic habent (Tom. 2, Wittemb., fol. 188):

39] Hoc Cinglius vocat alloecosis, cum aliquid de divinitate Christi dicitur, quod tamen humanitatis proprium est, et contra. Verbi gratia, ubi in Scriptura dicitur, Luc. 24, 26:

the natures in the person of Christ were not true. Next to the article of the Holy Trinity this is the greatest mystery in heaven and on earth, as Paul says: Without controversy, great is the mystery of godliness, that God was manifest in the flesh, 1 Tim. 3, 16. For since the Apostle Peter in clear words testifies [2 Ep. 1, 4] that we also, in whom Christ dwells only by grace, on account of that sublime mystery, are in Christ, partakers of the divine nature, what kind of communion of the divine nature, then, must that be of which the apostle says that in Christ dwelt all the fullness of the Godhead bodily, so that God and man are one person? But since it is highly important that this doctrine de communicatione idiomatum, that is, of the communion of the properties of both natures, be treated and explained with proper discrimination, — for the propositiones or praedicationes, that is, how to speak of the person of Christ, and of its natures and properties, are not all of one kind and mode, and when they are employed without proper discrimination, the doctrine becomes confused and the simple reader is easily led astray, — the following explanation should be carefully noted, which, for the purpose of making it plainer and simple, may well be comprised under three heads:

Namely, first, since in Christ two distinct natures exist and remain unchanged and unconfused in their natural essence and properties, and yet of both natures there is only one person, hence, that which is, indeed, an attribute of only one nature is ascribed not to that nature alone, as separate, but to the entire person, which is at the same time God and man (whether it is called God or man).

But in hoc genere, that is, in this mode of speaking, it does not follow that what is ascribed to the person is at the same time a property of both natures, but it is distinctively explained what nature it is according to which anything is ascribed to the person. Thus the Son of God was born of the seed of David according to the flesh, Rom. 1, 3. Also: Christ was put to death according to the flesh, and hath suffered for us in, or according to, the flesh, 1 Pet. 3, 18; 4, 1.

However, since beneath the words, when it is said that what is peculiar to one nature is ascribed to the entire person, secret and open Sacramentarians conceal their pernicious error, by naming indeed the entire person, but understanding thereby nevertheless only the one nature, and entirely excluding the other nature, as though the mere human nature had suffered for us, as Dr. Luther in his Large Confession concerning the Holy Supper has written concerning the alloeosis of Zwingli, we will here set down Luther's own words, in order that the Church of God may be guarded in the best way against this error. His words are as follows:

Zwingli calls that an ALLOEOSIS when something is said of the divinity of Christ which really belongs to the humanity, or vice versa. As Luke 24, 26: "Ought not Christ to have den und also zu seiner Herrlichkeit eingehen? Sie gaukelte er, daß ‚Christus‘ für ‚die menschliche Natur‘ genommen werde. Hüte dich, hüte dich, sage ich, vor der alloeosis! Sie ist des Teufels Farbe; denn sie richtet zuletzt einen solchen Christum zu, nach dem ich nicht gern wollte ein Christ sein, nämlich, daß Christus hinfort nicht mehr sei noch tue mit seinem Leiden und Leben denn ein anderer schlechter Heiliger. Denn wenn ich das glaube, daß allein die menschliche Natur für mich gelitten hat, so ist mir der Christus ein schlechter Heiland, so bedarf er wohl selbst eines Heilandes. Summa, es ist unsäglich, was der Teufel mit der alloeosis sucht.“

Und bald hernach: „Ob die alte Wettermacherin, die Frau Vernunft, der alloeosis Großmutter, sagen würde: Ja, die Gottheit kann nicht leiden noch sterben, sollst du antworten: Das ist wahr; aber dennoch, weil Gottheit und Menschheit in Christo eine Person ist, so gibt die Schrift um solcher persönlichen Einigkeit willen auch der Gottheit alles, was der Menschheit widerfährt, und wiederum. Und ist auch also in der Wahrheit; denn das mußt du ja sagen, die Person (zeigt Christum) leidet, stirbt; nun ist die Person wahrhaftiger Gott, darum ist recht geredet: Gottes Sohn leidet. Denn obwohl das eine Stüd (daß ich so rede), als die Gottheit, nicht leidet, so leidet dennoch die Person, welche Gott ist, am andern Stüd, als an der Menschheit; denn in der Wahrheit ist Gottes Sohn für uns gekreuzigt, das ist, die Person, die Gott ist; denn sie ist, sie (sage ich), die Person, ist gekreuzigt nach der Menschheit.“

Und abermals bald hernach: „Wo die alloeosis soll bestehen, wie sie Zwingel führt, so wird Christus zwei Personen müssen sein, eine göttliche und eine menschliche, weil er die Sprüche vom Leiden allein auf die menschliche Natur zeucht [zieht] und allerdings von der Gottheit wendet. Denn wo die Werte geteilt und gesondert werden, da muß auch die Person zertrümmert werden, weil alle Werte oder Leiden nicht den Naturen, sondern der Person zugeeignet werden. Denn die Person ist's, die alles tut und leidet, eines nach dieser Natur, das andere nach jener Natur; wie das alles die Gelehrten wohl wissen. Darum halten wir unsern Herrn Christum für Gott und Mensch in einer Person, non confundendo naturas nec dividendo personam, daß wir die Natur [die Naturen] nicht mengen und die Person auch nicht trennen.“

Item D. Luther „Von den Conciliis und Kircken“: „Wir Christen müssen wissen, wo Gott nicht mit in der Wage ist und das Gewicht gibt, so sinken wir mit unserer Schüssel zu Grunde. Daß meine ich also: wo es nicht sollte heißen: Gott ist für uns gestorben, sondern allein ein Mensch, so sind wir verloren. Aber wenn Gottes Tod und Gott gestorben in der Wagschüssel liegt, so sinkt er unter, und wir fahren empor als eine leichte, lebige [leere] Schüssel; aber er kann auch wohl wieder emporfahren oder aus seiner Schüssel springen. Er könnte aber nicht in der Schüssel sitzen, er müßte uns gleich ein Mensch werden „Nonne haec oportuit pati Christum [R. 771 et ita intrare in gloriam suam? Ibi nugatur Cinglius, quod vocabulum „Christus“ hoc loco pro „humana natura“ sumatur. Cave tibi, 40] cave, inquam, tibi ab ista alloeosi! Est enim larva quaedam diaboli, quae tandem talem Christum fingit, secundum cuius rationes ego certe nolim esse Christianus. Hoc enim illa vult, quod Christus nihil amplius sit aut efficiat sua passione et vita quam alius quispiam sanctus. Si enim persuaderi mihi patiar, ut credam, solam humanam naturam pro me passam esse, profecto Christus mihi non magni pretii salvator erit, sed ipse tandem salvatore eget. In summa, verbis explicari non potest, quid diabolus per hanc alloeosin molitur.“

41) Et paucis interpositis: Si forte venefica illa, domina ratio (cuius neptis est ipsa alloeosis) reclamare voluerit, dicens: Divinitas neque pati neque mori potest, tu respondebis: Verum id quidem est; nihilominus tamen, quia divinitas et humanitas in Christo unam personam constituunt, Scriptura propter hypostaticam illam unionem etiam divinitati omnia illa tribuit, quae humanitati accidunt, et vicissim humanitati, quae divinitati tatis sunt. Et sane revera ita res sese habent. Hoc enim fateri te necesse est: haec persona (monstrato Christo) patitur, moritur; haec autem persona est verus Deus. Recte igitur dicitur: Filius Dei patitur. Etsi enim una ipsius pars (ut sic loquar), divinitas videlicet, non patitur, tamen ea persona, quae Deus est, patitur in altera sua parte, nimirum in humanitate. Revera enim Filius Dei pro nobis est crucifixus, hoc est, persona, quae Deus est. Ipsa enim, ipsa (inquam) persona, crucifixa est, secundum humanitatem.

43) Et rursus post aliqua: Si constabit alloeosis, ut eam Cinglius proponit, in Christo duas personas esse necesse erit, divinam videlicet et humanam, quandoquidem Cinglius dicta Scripturae de passione tantum ad humanitatem inflectit eaque per omnia a divinitate separat. Ubi enim opera divelluntur et [R. 772 separantur, ubi etiam personam ipsam dividi necesse est, cum omnia opera omnesque passionis non naturis, sed personae tribuantur. Persona enim ipsa est, quae omnia illa agit et patitur, hoc quidem secundum hanc naturam, illud vero secundum alteram naturam; quae sane omnia viris eruditissimis sunt notissima. Quare agnoscimus Dominum nostrum Iesum Christum Deum et hominem in una persona, non confundendo naturas nec dividendo personam.

44) In eandem sententiam loquitur D. Lutherus etiam in eo libello, quem de conciliis et ecclesia scripsit (Tom. 7, Wittemb., fol. 530): Sciendum id nobis Christianis est, nisi Deus in altera lance sit et pondere vincat, nos lance nostra deorsum (ad interitum) ferri. Hoc sic accipi volo: Nisi haec vera sint: Deus mortuus est pro nobis, et si solus homo pro nobis mortuus est, tum profecto prorsus actum fuerit de nobis. At vero, si Dei mors, et quod Deus ipse mortuus est, in altera lance ponitur, tum ille deorsum fertur, nos vero instar vacuae et levioris lancis sursum tendimus.

suffered these things, and to enter into His glory!" Here Zwingli juggles, asserting that [the word] Christ is understood of the human nature. Beware, beware, I say, of the ALLOEOSIS! For it is a devil's mask, for at last it manufactures such a Christ after whom I certainly would not be a Christian; namely, that henceforth Christ should be no more and do no more with His sufferings and life than any other mere saint. For if I believe this [permit myself to be persuaded] that only the human nature has suffered for me, then Christ is to me a poor Savior, then He Himself indeed needs a Savior. In a word, it is unspeakable what the devil seeks by the ALLOEOSIS.

And shortly afterwards: If the old weather-witch, Dame Reason, the grandmother of the ALLOEOSIS, would say, Yea, divinity cannot suffer nor die; you shall reply, That is true; yet, because in Christ divinity and humanity are one person, Scripture, on account of this personal union, ascribes also to divinity everything that happens to the humanity, and vice versa. And it is so in reality; for you must certainly answer this, that the person (meaning Christ) suffers and dies. Now the person is true God; therefore it is rightly said: The Son of God suffers. For although the one part (to speak thus), namely, the divinity, does not suffer, yet the person, which is God, suffers in the other part, namely, in His humanity; for in truth God's Son has been crucified for us, that is, the person which is God. For the person, the person, I say, was crucified according to the humanity.

And again, shortly afterwards: If the ALLOEOSIS is to stand as Zwingli teaches it, then Christ will have to be two persons, one divine and one human, because Zwingli applies the passages concerning suffering to the human nature alone, and diverts them entirely from the divinity. For if the works be parted and separated, the person must also be divided, since all the works or sufferings are ascribed not to the natures, but to the person. For it is the person that does and suffers everything, one thing according to one nature, and another according to the other nature, all of which the learned know well. Therefore we regard our Lord Christ as God and man in one person, NON CONFUNDENDO NATURAS NEC DIVIDENDO PERSONAM, so that we neither confound the natures nor divide the person.

Dr. Luther says also in his book Of the Councils and the Church: We Christians must know that if God is not also in the balance, and gives the weight, we sink to the bottom with our scale. By this I mean: If it were not to be said [if these things were not true], God has died for us, but only a man, we would be lost. But if "God's death" and "God died" lie in the scale of the balance, then He sinks down, and we rise up as a light, [wenn er nicht ein Mensch wie wir geworben wäre], daß es heißen könnte: Gott gestorben, Gottes Marter, Gottes Blut, Gottes Tod. Denn Gott in seiner Natur kann nicht sterben; aber nun Gott und Mensch vereinigt ist in einer Person, so heißet's recht Gottes Tod, wenn der Mensch stirbt, der mit Gott ein Ding oder eine Person ist." Bis daher Lutherus.

Daraus offenbar, daß es unrecht geredet sei, wenn gesagt oder geschrieben wird, daß hievor gesegte Reden: „Gott hat gelitten, Gott ist gestorben“, allein praedicatio verbalis, daß ist, allein bloße Worte [seien] und [es] nicht mit der That also sei. Denn unser einfältiger christlicher Glaube weiset's aus [zeigt's an, beweist es], daß der Sohn Gottes, so Mensch [ge]worden, für uns gelitten, gestorben und mit seinem Blute uns erlöst habe.

Zum andern, was anlangt die Verrichtung des Amtes Christi, da handelt und wirkt die Person nicht in, mit, durch oder nach einer Natur allein, sondern in, nach, mit und durch beide Naturen, oder, wie das Concilium Chalcedonense redet, eine Natur wirkt mit Gemeinschaft der andern, was einer jeden Eigenschaft ist. Also ist Christus unser Mittler, Erlöser, König, Hohepriester, Haupt, Hirte usw. nicht nach einer Natur allein, es sei die göttliche oder die menschliche, sondern nach beiden Naturen: wie diese Lehre anderswo ausdrücklich [ausführlicher] gehandelt wird.

Zum dritten aber ist noch viel ein anderes, wenn davon gefragt, geredet oder gehandelt wird, ob denn die Naturen in der persönlichen Vereinigung in Christo nichts anderes oder nicht mehr denn nur allein ihre natürlichen, wesentlichen Eigenschaften haben; denn daß sie dieselben haben und behalten, ist oben gemeldet.

Was nun die göttliche Natur in Christo anlangt, weil bei Gott keine Veränderung ist, Jak. 1, ist seiner göttlichen Natur durch die Menschwerdung an ihrem Wesen und Eigenschaften nichts ab- oder zu[ge]gangen, ist in [ist sie in] oder für sich dadurch weder gemindert noch gemehrt.

Was aber anlangt die angenommene menschliche Natur in der Person Christi, haben wohl etliche streiten wollen, daß dieselbe auch in der persönlichen mit der Gottheit Vereinigung [auch in der persönlichen Vereinigung mit der Gottheit] anders und mehr nicht habe denn nur allein ihre natürlichen, wesentlichen Eigenschaften, nach welchen sie ihren Brüdern allenthalben gleich ist, und daß deswegen der menschlichen Natur in Christo nichts solle noch könne zugeschrieben werden, was über oder wider ihre natürlichen Eigenschaften sei, wenngleich der Schrift Zeugnisse dahin lauten. Aber daß solche Meinung falsch und unrecht sei, ist aus Gottes Wort so klar, daß auch ihre eigenen Mitverwandten [Genossen] nunmehr solchen Irrtum strafen und verwerfen. Denn die Heilige Schrift und die alten Väter aus der Schrift zeugen gewaltig, daß die menschliche Natur in Christo darum und daher, weil sie mit der göttlichen Natur in Christo persönlich vereinigt [ist], als sie nach abgelegter knechtischer Gestalt und Erniedri-

Sed et ille deinde rursus vel sursum tendere, vel e lance exsilire potest. Non autem poterat in lancem descendere et considerare, nisi nostri similis, hoc est, homo fieret, ut vere et recte de ipsius passione dici posset: Deus mortuus est, Dei passio, Dei sanguis, Dei mors. Non enim in sua natura Deus mori potest. Postquam autem Deus et homo unitus est in una persona, recte et vere dicitur: Deus mortuus est, quando videlicet ille homo moritur, qui cum Deo unum quiddam seu una persona est. Hactenus Lutherus.

45) Ex his liquet non carere errore, si quis dixerit scripsitque, quod commemoratae propositiones: Deus passus est, Deus mortuus est, sint tantummodo praedicationes verbales, hoc est, nuda verba, sine re. Simplicissima enim Christiana fides nostra docet, [R. 773] quod Filius Dei, qui homo factus est, pro nobis passus ac mortuus sit nosque sanguine suo redemerit.

46) Deinde, quod ad rationes officii Christi attinet, persona non agit et operatur in seu cum una vel per unam naturam tantum, sed potius in, cum et secundum atque per utramque naturam, seu, ut Concilium Chalcedonense loquitur, una natura agit seu operatur cum communicatione alterius, quod cuiusque proprium est. Itaque Christus est noster Mediator, Redemptor, Rex, Summus Pontifex, Caput et Pastor etc. non secundum unam tantum naturam, sive divinam sive humanam, sed secundum utramque naturam; de qua re alias etiam copiosius dicitur.

48) Tertio vero longe adhuc aliud est, quando de eo quaeritur, disseritur vel tractatur, an duae illae naturae in hypostatica unione in Christo nihil amplius nisi suas naturales essentialia proprietates habeant; quod enim easdem habeant atque retineant, supra docuimus.

49) Quantum ergo ad divinam in Christo naturam attinet, cum in ipso nulla sit, ut Iacobus testatur, Iac. 1, 17, transmutatio, divinae Christi naturae per incarnationem nihil (quoad essentialia et proprietates eius) vel accessit vel decessit et per eam in se vel per se neque diminuta neque aucta est.

50) Iam quod ad humanam naturam in persona Christi attinet, non defuerunt quidam, qui contenderent, eam in personali etiam cum Divinitate unione nihil amplius habere quam duntaxat suas naturales essentialia proprietates, quarum ratione fratribus suis per omnia similis est. Unde affirmarunt, humanae in Christo naturae nihil eorum tribui vel debere vel posse, quod sit supra vel contra naturales ipsius proprietates, etiamsi Scripturae testimonia humanae Christi naturae talia tribuant.

51) Hanc vero ipsorum opinionem falsam esse Verbo Dei adeo perspicue demonstrari [R. 774] potest, ut etiam ipsorum consortes eum ipsum errorem reprehendere et reiicere tandem coeperint. Sacrae enim litterae et orthodoxi patres, Scripturae verbis edocti, praeclare testantur, quod humana natura in Christo eam ob causam et inde adeo, quod cum divina natura personaliter unita est (deposito servili statu et humiliatione, iam glorificata et ad empty scale. But indeed He can also rise again or leap out of the scale; yet He could not sit in the scale unless He became a man like us, so that it could be said: "God died," "God's passion," "God's blood," "God's death." For in His nature God cannot die; but now that God and man are united in one person, it is correctly called God's death, when the man dies who is one thing or one person with God. Thus far Luther.

Hence it is manifest that it is incorrect to say or write that the above-mentioned expressions (God suffered, God died) are only prædicationes verbales (verbal assertions), that is, mere words, and that it is not so in fact. For our simple Christian faith proves that the Son of God, who became man, suffered for us, died for us, and redeemed us with His blood.

Secondly, as to the execution of the office of Christ, the person does not act and work in, with, through, or according to only one nature, but in, according to, with, and through both natures, or, as the Council of Chalcedon expresses it, one nature operates in communion with the other what is a property of each. Therefore Christ is our Mediator, Redeemer, King, High Priest, Head, Shepherd, etc., not according to one nature only, whether it be the divine or the human, but according to both natures, as this doctrine has been treated more fully in other places.

Thirdly, however, it is still a much different thing when the question, declaration, or discussion is, whether the natures in the personal union in Christ have nothing else or nothing more than only their natural, essential properties; for that they have and retain these has been mentioned above.

Now, as regards the divine nature in Christ, since in God there is no change, Jas. 1, 17, His divine nature, in its essence and properties, suffered no subtraction nor addition by the incarnation; was not, in or by itself, either diminished or increased thereby.

But as regards the assumed human nature in the person of Christ, some have indeed wished to contend that even in the personal union with divinity it has nothing else and nothing more than only its natural, essential properties according to which it is in all things like its brethren; and that, on this account, nothing should or could be ascribed to the human nature in Christ which is beyond, or contrary to, its natural properties, even though the testimony of Scripture is to that effect. But that this opinion is false and incorrect is so clear from God's Word that even their own associates rebuke and reject this error. For the Holy Scriptures, and the ancient Fathers from the Scriptures [in which they were fully trained], testify forcefully that, for the reason and because of the fact that it has been personally united with the divine nature in Christ, the human nature in Christ, when it was glorified and exalted to the right hand of the majesty and power of God, after the form of a servant and humiliagung glorifiziert und zur Rechten der Majestät und Kraft Gottes erhöht [worden], neben und über ihre natürlichen, wesentlichen, bleibenden Eigenschaften auch sonderliche, hohe, große, übernatürliche, unerforschliche, unaussprechliche, himmlische praerogativas und Vorzüge an Majestät, Herrlichkeit, Kraft und Gewalt über alles, was genannt mag werden, nicht allein in dieser, sondern auch in der künftigen Welt, empfangen habe; daß also die menschliche Natur in Christo zu den Wirkungen des Amtes Christi auf ihr Maß und Weise mit gebraucht werde und auch ihre efficaciam, daß ist, Kraft und Wirkung, habe nicht allein aus und nach ihren natürlichen wesentlichen Eigenschaften, oder allein soferne sich das Vermögen derselben erstreckt, sondern vornehmlich aus und nach der Majestät, Herrlichkeit, Kraft und Gewalt, welche sie durch die persönliche Vereinigung, Glorifikation und Erhöhung empfangen hat. Und dies können oder dürfen auch nunmehr fast die Widerfacher nicht leugnen, allein daß sie disputieren und streiten, daß es nur erschaffene Gaben oder finitae qualitates sein sollen wie in den Heiligen, damit die menschliche Natur in Christo begabt und geziert [sei], und daß sie nach ihren Gedanken und aus ihren eigenen argumentationibus oder Beweisungen abmessen und ausrechnen wollen, was [wessen] die menschliche Natur in Christo ohne derselben Abtilgung fähig oder nicht fähig könne oder solle sein.

Aber der beste, gewisseste und sicherste Weg in diesem Streit ist dieser, nämlich: was Christus nach seiner angenommenen menschlichen Natur durch die persönliche Vereinigung, Glorifikation oder Erhöhung empfangen habe, und was [und wessen] seine angenommene menschliche Natur über die [außer den und hinaus über die] natürlichen Eigenschaften ohne derselben Abtilgung fähig sei, daß solches niemand besser oder gründlicher wissen könne denn der Herr Christus selber; derselbe aber hat solches, soviel uns in diesem Leben davon zu wissen bonnöten [ist], in seinem Wort offenbart. Wobon wir nun in der Schrift in diesem Falle klare, gewisse Zeugnisse haben, das sollen wir einfältig glauben und in keinem Wege dawider disputieren, als könnte die menschliche Natur in Christo desselben nicht fähig sein.

Nun ist das wohl recht und wahr, was von den erschaffenen Gaben, so der menschlichen Natur in Christo gegeben und mitgeteilt, daß sie dieselben an oder für sich selbst habe, gesagt wird. Aber dieselben erreichen noch nicht die Majestät, welche die Schrift und die alten Väter aus der Schrift der angenommenen menschlichen Natur in Christo aufschreiben.

Denn lebendig machen, alles Gericht und alle Gewalt haben im Himmel und auf Erden, alles in seinen Händen haben, alles unter seinen Füßen unterworfen haben, von Sünden reinigen usw. sind nicht erschaffene Gaben, sondern göttliche, unendliche Eigenschaften, welche doch nach Aussage der Schrift dem Menschen Christo gegeben und mitgeteilt sind, Joh. 5 und 6; Matth. 28; Dan. 7; Joh. 3 und 13; Matth. 11; Eph. 1; Hebr. 2; 1 Kor. 15; Joh. 1.

Und daß solche Mittelung nicht per phrasin aut modum loquendi, das ist, allein mit Worten dexteram maiestatis et virtutis divinae exaltata), praeter et supra naturales essentialitates atque in ipsa permanentes humanas proprietates etiam singulares, excellentissimas, maximas, supernaturales, impervestigabiles, ineffabiles atque coelestes praerogativas maiestatis, gloriae, virtutis ac potentiae super omne, quod nominatur, non solum in hoc saeculo, sed etiam in futuro, Eph. 1, 21, acceperit, ut ita humana in Christo natura (suo modo et ratione) in exsequendo officio Christi simul adhibeatur, cooperetur et suam efficaciam, id est, virtutem et operationem, habeat, non tantum ex suis naturalibus proprietatibus aut secundum essentialitates proprietates, aut quousque earum virtus et efficacia progreditur, sed praecipue secundum maiestatem, gloriam, virtutem atque potentiam, quam per unionem hypostaticam, glorificationem et exaltationem ac-52] cepit. Et hoc ipsum hodie ne adversarii quidem nostri prorsus negare audent, nisi quod disputant et contendunt, illa tantum esse dona creata et finitas dotes seu qualitates, quibus humana in Christo naturam donatam et ornatam esse sentiunt; quales sunt etiam in sanctis hominibus. Et argutis cogitationibus ac frivolis argumentationibus atque fictis probationibus metiri et ad calculum revocare conantur, quorum donorum humana natura in Christo, sine abolitione sua, capax aut non capax esse queat.

53] Rectissima autem et omnium tutissima via in huius controversiae diiudicatione [R. 775 est haec, videlicet neminem melius et certius nosse, quid Christus secundum assumptam humanam naturam (ratione unionis hypostaticae et glorificationis seu exaltationis) acceperit et quarum praerogativarum (praeter et supra naturales suas proprietates) sine eiusdem abolitione capax sit, quam ipsum Dominum nostrum Iesum Christum. Is vero hoc ipsum (quantum quidem nostra et quidem salutis causa in hac vita interest) in Verbo suo revelavit. De quibus igitur in Sacra Scriptura, quod ad hanc rem attinet, certa et perspicua testimonia habemus, simpliciter illis fidem adhibeamus et nequaquam contra disputemus, quasi humana natura in Christo illorum capax esse nequeat.

54] Vera quidem sunt, quae de creatis donis humanae naturae in Christo datis et communicatis dicuntur, quod humanitas Christi ea per se et in se ipsa habeat. Sed haec non satis explicant vel assequuntur maiestatem illam, quam Scriptura et orthodoxi patres secundum Scripturam humanae in Christo naturae ascribunt.

55] Vivificare enim, omne iudicium omnemque potestatem in coelo et in terra, adeoque omnia in manibus suis habere, omnia sub pedibus ipsis subiecta esse, a peccatis mundare etc. non sunt dona creata, sed divinae infinitae proprietates, quae tamen (iuxta testimonia Scripturae) Christo homini datae et communicatae sunt, Ioh. 5, 25; 6, 39; Matth. 28, 18; Dan. 7, 14; Ioh. 3, 35; 13, 3; Matth. 11, 27; Eph. 1, 22; Hebr. 2, 8; 1 Cor. 15, 27; Ioh. 1, 3. 14. 51.

56] Quod autem haec communicatio non tantum, quasi per phrasin aut modum loquendi tion had been laid aside, did receive, apart from, and over and above its natural, essential, permanent properties, also special, high, great, supernatural, inscrutable, ineffable, heavenly prærogativas (prerogatives) and excellences in majesty, glory, power, and might above everything that can be named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come [Eph. 1, 21]; and that, accordingly, in the operations of the office of Christ, the human nature in Christ, in its measure and mode, is equally employed [at the same time], and has also its efficaciam, that is, power and efficacy, not only from, and according to, its natural, essential attributes, or only so far as their ability extends, but chiefly from, and according to, the majesty, glory, power, and might which it has received through the personal union, glorification, and exaltation. And nowadays even the adversaries can or dare scarcely deny this, except that they dispute and contend that those are only created gifts or finitæ qualitates (finite qualities), as in the saints, with which the human nature in Christ is endowed and adorned; and that, according to their [crafty] thoughts or from their own [silly] argumentationes (argumentations) or [fictitious] proofs, they wish to measure and calculate of what the human nature in Christ could or should be capable or incapable without becoming annihilated.

But the best, most certain, and surest way in this controversy is this, namely, that what Christ has received according to His assumed human nature through the personal union, glorification, or exaltation, and of what His assumed human nature is capable beyond the natural properties, without becoming annihilated, no one can know better or more thoroughly than the Lord Christ Himself; and He has revealed it in His Word, as much as is needful for us to know of it in this life. Now, everything for which we have in this instance clear, certain testimonies in the Scriptures, we must simply believe, and in no way argue against it, as though the human nature in Christ could not be capable of the same.

Now it is indeed correct and true what has been said concerning the created gifts which have been given and imparted to the human nature in Christ, that it possesses them in or of itself. But these do not reach unto the majesty which the Scriptures, and the ancient Fathers from Scripture, ascribe to the assumed human nature in Christ.

For to quicken, to have all judgment and all power in heaven and on earth, to have all things in His hands, to have all things in subjection beneath His feet, to cleanse from sin, etc., are not created gifts, but divine, infinite properties; and yet, according to the declaration of Scripture, these have been given and communicated to the man Christ, John 5, 27; 6, 39; Matt. 28, 18; Dan. 7, 14; John 3, 35; 13, 3; Matt. 11, 27; Eph. 1, 22; Heb. 2, 8; 1 Cor. 15, 27; John 1, 3; 14, 51.

And that this communication is not to be understood per phrasin aut modum loquendi (as a phrase or mode of speaking), that is, only in words, with respect to the person ac-von der Person allein nach der göttlichen Natur, sondern nach der angenommenen menschlichen Natur zu verstehen sei, beweisen drei starke, unüberlegliche Argumente und nachfolgende Gründe:

1. Zum ersten ist ein [ist es eine] einhellige Regel der ganzen alten rechtgläubigen Kirche: Was die Heilige Schrift zeugt, daß Christus in der Zeit empfangen habe, daß er dasselbe nicht nach der göttlichen (nach welcher er alles von Ewigkeit hat), sondern die Person ratione et respectu humanae naturae, das ist, nach der angenommenen menschlichen Natur, dasselbe in der Zeit empfangen habe.

2. Zum andern zeugt die Schrift klärlieh Joh. 5 und 6, daß die Kraft, lebendig zu machen und das Gericht zu halten, Christo gegeben sei darum, daß er des Menschen Sohn ist, und wie [und insofern] er Fleisch und Blut hat.

3. Zum dritten sagt die Schrift nicht allein insgemein von der Person des Menschensohnes, sondern deutet auch ausdrücklich auf seine angenommene menschliche Natur, 1 Joh. 1: „Das Blut Christi reiniget uns von allen Sünden“, nicht allein nach dem Verdienst, welches am Kreuz einmal verrichtet, sondern Johannes redet an demselben Ort davon, daß uns im Werk oder Handlung der Rechtfertigung nicht allein die göttliche Natur in Christo [reine]ge, sondern auch sein Blut (per modum efficaciae, das ist, wirklich) reiniget uns von allen Sünden. Also Joh. 6 ist das Fleisch Christi eine lebendigmachende Speise, wie daraus auch das Ephesinum Concilium geschlossen hat, daß das Fleisch Christi die Kraft habe, lebendig zu machen; wie von diesem Artikel andere viel herrliche Zeugnisse der alten rechtgläubigen Kirche anderswo angezogen sind.

Daß nun Christus nach seiner menschlichen Natur solches empfangen [habe], und der angenommenen menschlichen Natur in Christo solches gegeben und mitgeteilt sei, sollen und müssen wir nach der Schrift glauben. Aber wie oben gesagt, weil die beiden Naturen in Christo also vereinigt [sind], daß sie nicht miteinander vermischet oder eine in die andere verwandelt, auch eine jede ihre natürlichen, wesentlichen Eigenschaften behält, also daß einer Natur Eigenschaften der andern Natur Eigenschaften nimmermehr werden, muß diese Lehre auch recht erklärt und mit Fleiß wider alle Kegerien verwahrt werden.

Indem wir denn nichts Neues von uns selber erdenken [in dieser Sache erdenken wir eben nichts Neues aus uns selbst], sondern nehmen an und erhalten [wiederholen] die Erklärungen, so die alte rechtgläubige Kirche aus gutem Grunde der Heiligen Schrift hiervon gegeben hat, nämlich daß solche göttliche Kraft, Leben, Gewalt, Majestät und Herrlichkeit der angenommenen menschlichen Natur in Christo gegeben sei, nicht also, wie der Vater dem Sohn nach der göttlichen Natur sein Wesen und alle göttlichen Eigenschaften von Ewigkeit mitgeteilt hat, daher er e i n e s Wesens mit dem Vater und Gott gleich ist; denn Christus ist allein nach der göttlichen Natur dem Vater gleich, aber nach der angenommenen menschlichen Natur ist er unter Gott; daraus offenbar, daß wir keine confusionem, exaequationem, abolitionem, das ist, keine Vermischung, Vergleichung oder Abtildicta, de persona Christi secundum ipsius divinitatem, sed potius secundum assumptam humanam naturam sit intelligenda, id tribus firmissimis, atque adeo invictis argumentis, quae iam recitabimus, demonstrari potest:

57] I. Primo exstat regula communissima, maximo totius ecclesiae orthodoxae [R. 776] consensu approbata, videlicet: quae Scriptura Christum in tempore accepisse affirmat, ea non secundum divinitatem accepisse (secundum quam omnia ab aeterno possidet), sed quod persona Christi ratione et respectu humanae naturae ea in tempore acceperit.

58] II. Deinde Scriptura luculenter testatur Ioh. 5, 21 sq. et 6, 39 sq., quod virtus vivificandi et potestas exercendi iudicii Christo datae sint propterea, quia filius hominis est, quatenus videlicet carnem et sanguinem habet.

59] III. Postremo Scriptura in hoc negotio non tantum in genere filii hominis mentionem facit, sed quasi digitum in assumptam humanam naturam intendit, cum inquit 1 Ioh. 1, 7: Sanguis Iesu Christi, Filii Dei, emundat nos ab omni peccato. Id autem non tantum de merito sanguinis Christi in cruce semel perfecto accipiendum est, sed Iohannes eo loco de ea re agit, quod in negotio iustificationis non tantum divina natura in Christo, verum etiam ipsius sanguis per modum efficaciae nos ab omni peccato emundet. Ita caro Christi est vivificans cibis, Ioh. 6, 48—58. Et ex hoc evangelistae et apostoli dicto Concilium Ephesinum pronuntiavit, carnem Christi habere vim vivificandi. Et de hoc articulo multa in nostrorum hominum scriptis clarissima veteris et orthodoxae ecclesiae testimonia collecta passim exstant.

60] Quod igitur Christus virtutem vivificandi secundum humanitatem suam acceperit, et quod illa vis assumptae humanae naturae in Christo data atque communicata sit, id ex analogia Verbi Dei credere tenemur. Sed, ut paulo ante monuimus, cum duae naturae in Christo eo modo sint unitae, ut nulla sit facta confusio aut naturae unius in alteram transmutatio, et utraque suas naturales et essentialis proprietates retineat, ita ut unius naturae proprietates nunquam alterius naturae proprietates fiant: haec doctrina dextre [R. 777] admodum declaranda et adversus haeresium corruptelas bene munienda est.

61] In hoc autem negotio nihil novi de ingenio nostro fingimus, sed amplectimur et repetimus declarationem, quam vetus et orthodoxa ecclesia, e Sacrae Scripturae fundamentis desumptam, ad nos incorruptam transmisit, videlicet quod divina illa virtus, vita, potestas, maiestas et gloria assumptae humanae naturae in Christo data sit. Id vero non eo modo, sicut Pater Filio, secundum divinam naturam, essentiam suam et omnes divinas proprietates ab aeterno communicavit, unde et unius cum Patre essentiae et ipsi aequalis est. Christus enim tantum secundum divinam naturam Patri aequalis est; secundum humanam vero naturam sub Deo est. Ex his manifestum est, nullam nos confusionem, exaequationem aut abolitionem naturarum in Christo statuere. Etenim virtus vivificandi cording to the divine nature alone, but according to the assumed human nature, the three strong, irrefutable arguments and reasons, now following, show:

1. First, there is a unanimously received rule of the entire ancient orthodox Church that what Holy Scripture testifies that Christ received in time He received not according to the divine nature (according to which He has everything from eternity), but the person has received it in time ratione et respectu humanæ naturæ, that is, as referring, and with respect to, according to the assumed human nature.

2. Secondly, the Scriptures testify clearly, John 5, 21 f.; 6, 39 f., that the power to quicken and to execute judgment has been given to Christ for the reason that He is the Son of Man, and in as far as He has flesh and blood.

3. Thirdly, the Scriptures speak not merely in general of the Son of Man, but also indicate expressly His assumed human nature, 1 John 1, 7: The blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin, not only according to the merit [of the blood of Christ] which was once attained on the cross; but in this place John speaks of this, that in the work or act of justification not only the divine nature in Christ, but also His blood per modum efficacæ (by mode of efficacy), that is, actually, cleanses us from all sins. Thus in John 6, 48—58 the flesh of Christ is a quickening food; as also the Council of Ephesus concluded from this [statement of the evangelist and apostle] that the flesh of Christ has power to quicken; and as many other glorious testimonies of the ancient orthodox Church concerning this article are cited elsewhere.

Now, that Christ, according to His human nature, has received this, and that it has been given and communicated to the assumed human nature in Christ, we shall and must believe according to the Scriptures. But, as above said, since the two natures in Christ are united in such a manner that they are not mingled with one another or changed one into the other, and each retains its natural, essential property, so that the properties of one nature never become properties of the other nature, this doctrine must also be rightly explained and diligently guarded against all heresies.

While we, then, invent nothing new of ourselves, but receive and repeat the explanations which the ancient orthodox Church has given hereof from the good foundation of Holy Scripture, namely, that this divine power, life, might, majesty, and glory was given to the assumed human nature in Christ, not in such a way as the Father from eternity has communicated to the Son, according to the divine nature, His essence and all divine attributes, whence He is of one essence with the Father and is equal to God (for Christ is equal to the Father only according to the divine nature, while according to the assumed human nature He is beneath God; from which it is manifest that we make no confusionem, exaequationem, abolitionem, that is, no confusion, equaliza-gung der Naturen in Christo machen; so ist auch die Kraft, lebendig zu machen, nicht also in dem Fleisch Christi wie in seiner göttlichen Natur, nämlich als eine wesentliche Eigenschaft.

Es ist auch solche Kommunikation oder Mittheilung nicht geschehen durch eine wesentliche oder natürliche Ausgießung der Eigenschaften der göttlichen Natur in die menschliche, also daß Christus' Menschheit solche für sich selbst und von dem göttlichen Wesen abge sondert hätte, oder als hätte dadurch die menschliche Natur in Christo ihre natürlichen, wesentlichen Eigenschaften gar abgelegt und wäre nunmehr entweder in die Gottheit verwandelt oder derselben mit solchen mitgetheilten Eigenschaften in und für sich selbst [* derselben] gleich [ge]worden, oder daß nunmehr beider Naturen einerlei oder ja gleiche natürliche wesentliche Eigenschaften und Wirkungen sein sollten. Denn solche und dergleichen irrige Lehren sind in den alten bewährten conciliis aus Grund der Schrift billig verworfen und verdammt. Nullo enim modo vel facienda vel admittenda est aut conversio aut confusio aut exaequatio sive naturarum in Christo sive essentialium proprietatum. Daß ist: Denn auf keinerlei Weise soll gehalten oder zugelassen werden Verlehrung, Vermischung oder Vergleichung der Naturen in Christo oder derselben wesentlichen Eigenschaften.

Wie wir denn auch die Worte realis communicatio oder realiter kommuniziert, daß ist, die Theilung oder Gemeinschaft, so mit der Tat und Wahrheit geschieht, niemals von einer physica communicatione vel essentiali transfusione (daß ist, von einer wesentlichen, natürlichen Gemeinschaft oder Ausgießung, dadurch die Naturen in ihrem Wesen und derselben wesentlichen Eigenschaften vermengt [werden]) verstanden [haben], wie etliche solche Worte und Reden arglistig und böshaftig, die reine Lehre damit verdächtig zu machen, wider ihr eigen Gewissen verkehrt haben; sondern [obige Worte] allein der verbalen communicationi, daß ist, dieser Lehre entgegengesetzt haben, da solche Leute vorgeben, daß es nur eine phrasis und modus loquendi, daß ist, mehr nicht denn bloße Worte, Titel und Name sei, darauf sie auch so hart gebrungen, daß sie von keiner andern Gemeinschaft [haben] wissen wollen. Derwegen zu wahrhafter Erklärung der Majestät Christi wir solche Worte (de reali communicatione) gebraucht und damit anzeigen wollen, daß solche Gemeinschaft mit der Tat und Wahrheit, doch ohne alle Vermischung der Naturen und ihrer wesentlichen Eigenschaften, geschehen sei.

So halten und lehren wir nun mit der alten, rechtsgläubigen Kirche, wie dieselbe diese Lehre aus der Schrift erklärt hat, daß die menschliche Natur in Christo solche Majestät empfangen habe nach Art der persönlichen Vereinigung; nämlich, weil die ganze Fülle der Gottheit in Christo wohnt, nicht wie in andern heiligen Menschen oder Engeln, sondern leibhaftig, als in ihrem eigenen Leibe, daß sie mit aller ihrer Majestät, Kraft, Herrlichkeit und Wirkung in der angenommenen menschlichen Natur freiwillig (wann und wie er will) leuchtet, in [und in], mit und durch dieselbe seine göttliche Kraft, Herrlichkeit und Wirkung beweist, erzeigt und verrichtet, wie die Seele im Leibe und das Feuer in einem glühenden Eisen tut (denn durch solche Gleichnisse, wie droben auch vermeldet, hat die ganze alte Kirche diese Lehre erklärt); sol-non eo modo est in carne Christi, quo est in divina eius natura, videlicet ut essentialis proprietas.

62] Communicatio autem illa non facta est per essentialem aut naturalem effusionem proprietatum divinae naturae in naturam humanam, quasi humanitas Christi eas per se et a divina essentia separatas haberet, aut quasi per illam communicationem humana natura in Christo naturales ac essentielles suas proprietates prorsus deposuerit et vel in divinam naturam conversa, aut divinae naturae communicatis illis suis proprietatibus, in se ipsa et per se [sese], exaequata sit, aut quod utriusque naturae eadem aut certe aequales naturales et essentielles proprietates et operationes sint. Hi enim et similes errores in vetustissimis et approbatis conciliis e fundamentis Sacrae Scripturae merito sunt reiecti et damnati. Nullo enim modo vel facienda vel admittenda est aut conversio aut confusio aut exaequatio sive naturarum in Christo sive essentialium proprietatum.

63] Et quidem his vocabulis: realis [R. 778] communicatio, realiter communicari, nunquam ullam physicam communicationem vel essentialem transfusionem (qua naturae in suis essentiis aut essentialibus proprietatibus confunderentur) docere volumus, ut quidam vocabula et phrases illas astute et malitiose falsa interpretatione, contra conscientiam suam, pervertere non dubitarunt, tantum, ut piam doctrinam suspicionibus iniquissimis gravarent. Sed vocabula et phrases illas verbalium communicationi opposuimus, cum quidam fingerent, communicationem idiomatum nihil aliud nisi phrasin et modum quendam loquendi, hoc est, mera tantum verba, nomina et titulos inanes esse. Et hanc verbalem communicationem adeo urserunt, ut de nulla alia communicatione audire quidquam vellent. Quapropter ad recte declarandam maiestatem Christi vocabula (de reali communicatione) usurpavimus, ut significarem, communicationem illam vere et re ipsa (sine omni tamen naturarum et proprietatum essentialium confusione) factam esse.

64] Sentimus itaque et docemus cum veteri orthodoxa ecclesia, quemadmodum illa hanc doctrinam ex Scriptura Sacra declaravit, quod humana in Christo natura maiestatem illam acceperit secundum rationem hypostaticae unionis, videlicet quod cum tota divinitatis plenitudo in Christo habitet, non quemadmodum in sanctis hominibus et angelis, sed corporaliter, ut in proprio suo corpore, etiam omni sua maiestate, virtute, gloria, operatione in assumpta humana natura, liberrime (quando et quomodo Christo visum fuerit) luceat et in ea, cum ea et per eam divinam suam virtutem, maiestatem et efficaciam exerceat, operetur et perficiat. Idque ea quodammodo ratione, quia anima in corpore et ignis in ferro candente agit. Hac enim [R. 779] tion, or abolition of natures in Christ), so, too, the power to quicken is in the flesh of Christ not in that manner in which it is in His divine nature, namely, as an essential property.

Moreover, this communication or impartation has not occurred through an essential or natural infusion of the properties of the divine nature into the human, so that the humanity of Christ would have these by itself and apart from the divine essence, or as though the human nature in Christ had thereby [by this communication] entirely laid aside its natural, essential properties and were now either transformed into divinity, or had, with such communicated properties, in and by itself become equal to the same, or that there should now be for both natures identical or, at any rate, equal natural, essential properties and operations. For these and similar erroneous doctrines were justly rejected and condemned in the ancient approved councils on the basis of Holy Scripture. Nullo enim modo vel facienda vel admittenda est aut conversio aut confusio aut exaequatio sive naturarum in Christo sive essentialium proprietatum. That is: For in no way is conversion, confusion, or equalization of the natures in Christ or of their essential properties to be maintained [made] or admitted.

Accordingly, we have never understood the words realis communicatio or communicated realiter, that is, the impartation or communion which occurs in deed and truth, of any physica communicatio vel essentialis transfusio, physical communication or essential transfusion, that is, of an essential, natural communion or effusion, by which the natures would be commingled in their essence, and their essential properties, as some have craftily and wickedly, against their own conscience, perverted these words and phrases in order to make the pure doctrine suspected; but we have only opposed them to verbalis communicatio (verbal communication), that is, to this doctrine, when such persons assert that it is only phrasis and modus loquendi (a phrase and mode of speaking), that is, nothing more than mere words, titles, and names, upon which they have also laid so much stress that they would know of no other communion. Hence, for the true explanation of the majesty of Christ we have used such terms de reali communicatione (of real communion), and wished to indicate by them that this communion has occurred in deed and truth, however, without any confusion of natures and their essential properties.

We, therefore, hold and teach, in conformity with the ancient orthodox Church, as it has explained this doctrine from the Scriptures, that the human nature in Christ has received this majesty according to the manner of the personal union, namely, because the entire fulness of the divinity dwells in Christ, not as in other holy men or angels, but bodily, as in its own body, so that it shines forth with all its majesty, power, glory, and efficacy in the assumed human nature, voluntarily when and as He [Christ] wills, and in, with, and through the same manifests, exercises, des ist zur Zeit der [Er]niedrigung verborgen und hinterhalten [zurückgehalten] worden, aber je und nach abgelegter fleischlicher Gestalt geschieht solches völlig, gewaltig und öffentlich vor allen Heiligen im Himmel und Erden, und werden auch wir in jenem Leben solche seine Herrlichkeit von Angesicht zu Angesicht schauen, Joh. 17.

Also ist und bleibt in Christo nur eine einige göttliche Allmächtigkeit, Kraft, Majestät und Herrlichkeit, welche allein der göttlichen Natur eigen ist; dieselbe aber leuchtet, beweist und erzeigt sich völlig, aber doch freiwillig, in, mit und durch die angenommene erhöhte menschliche Natur in Christo. Gleichwie in einem glühenden Eisen nicht zweierlei Kraft zu leuchten und zu brennen ist, sondern die Kraft zu leuchten und zu brennen ist des Feuers Eigenschaft; aber weil das Feuer mit dem Eisen vereinigt [ist], so beweiset's und erzeiget's solche seine Kraft zu leuchten und zu brennen in, mit und durch das glühende Eisen, also daß auch das glühende Eisen daher und durch solche Vereinigung die Kraft hat zu leuchten und zu brennen, ohne Verwundlung des Wesens und der natürlichen Eigenschaften des Feuers und Eisens.

Derwegen verstehen wir solche Zeugnisse der Schrift, so von der Majestät reden, zu welcher die menschliche Natur in Christo erhöht ist, nicht also, daß solche göttliche Majestät, welche der göttlichen Natur des Sohnes Gottes eigen ist, in der Person des Menschensohnes schlecht nur allein nach seiner göttlichen Natur zugeschrieben soll werden, oder daß dieselbe Majestät in der menschlichen Natur Christi allein dergestalt sein sollte, daß seine menschliche Natur von derselben allein den bloßen Titel und Namen, per phrasin et modum loquendi, das ist, allein mit Worten, aber mit der Tat und Wahrheit ganz und gar keine Gemeinschaft mit ihr haben sollte. Denn auf solche Weise (weil Gott ein geistlich, unzertrennt Wesen und demnach allenthalben und in allen Creaturen ist, und in welchen er ist, sonderlich aber in den Gläubigen und Heiligen [in denen er] wohnt, daselbst solche seine Majestät mit und bei sich hat) auch mit Wahrheit gesagt werden möchte, daß in allen Creaturen, in welchen Gott ist, sonderlich aber in den Gläubigen und Heiligen, in welchen Gott wohnt, alle Fülle der Gottheit leibhaftig wohne, alle Schätze der Weisheit und der Erkenntnis verborgen [seien], alle Gewalt im Himmel und auf Erden gegeben werde, weil ihnen der Heilige Geist, der alle Gewalt hat, gegeben wird; dergestalt denn zwischen Christo nach seiner menschlichen Natur und den andern heiligen Menschen kein Unterschied gemacht [würde], und also Christus seiner Majestät, so er vor allen Creaturen als ein Mensch oder nach seiner menschlichen Natur empfangen hat, beraubt [würde]. Denn sonst keine Creatur, weder Mensch noch Engel, sagen kann oder soll: „Mir ist gegeben alle Gewalt im Himmel und auf Erden“; so doch Gott mit aller Fülle seiner Gottheit, die er allenthalben bei sich hat, in den Heiligen ist, aber nicht leibhaftig in ihnen wohnt similitudine (ut supra monuimus) tota erudita et pia antiquitas doctrinam hanc declaravit. 65] Haec autem humanae naturae maiestas in statu humiliationis maiori ex parte occultata et quasi dissimulata fuit. At nunc, post depositam servi formam (seu exinanitionem) maiestas Christi plene et efficacissime atque manifeste coram omnibus sanctis in coelo et in terris sese exserit. Et nos in altera illa beatissima vita hanc ipsius gloriam facie ad faciem videbimus, ut Iohannes testatur, cap. 17, 24.

66] Hac ratione est permanetque in Christo unica tantum divina omnipotentia, virtus, maiestas et gloria, quae est solius divinae naturae propria. Ea vero lucet et vim suam plene, liberrime tamen, exserit in et cum assumpta humanitate et per illam assumptam exaltatam in Christo humanitatem. Quemadmodum etiam in ferro candente non duplex est vis lucendi et urendi (quasi ignis peculiarem et ferrum etiam peculiarem et separatam vim lucendi et urendi haberet), quin potius illa vis lucendi et urendi est proprietas ignis. Sed tamen, quia ignis cum ferro unitus est, ideo vim et virtutem lucendi et urendi in et cum ferro et per ferrum illud candens exserit, ita quidem, ut ferrum ignitum ex hac unione vim habeat et lucendi et urendi, et tamen hoc fit sine transmutatione essentiae aut naturalium proprietatum tam ferri quam ignis.

67] Quare testimonia illa Sacrae Scripturae, quae de ea maiestate loquuntur, ad quam humana in Christo natura exaltata est, non in eam sententiam accipimus, quod divina illa maiestas (quae divinae naturae Filii Dei propria est) in persona Filii hominis tantum secundum divinam naturam Christo sit ascribenda, aut quod maiestas illa tantum ea ratione sit in humana Christi natura, ut humana Christi natura nudum tantum titulum et nomen solum divinae illius maiestatis, per phrasin et modum loquendi, revera autem nullam prorsus cum ea communicationem 68] habeat. Cum enim Deus sit spiritualis indivisa essentia, quae ubique et in [R. 780] omnibus creaturis est, et ubi est, ibi (praesertim in creditibus et sanctis habitans) suam secum maiestatem habet: tum (secundum superiorem falsam hypothesin) dici posset in omnibus creaturis, in quibus Deus est, praecipue vero in electis et sanctis, qui sunt templa Dei, totam plenitudinem divinitatis corporaliter inhabitare, in eis omnes thesauros sapientiae et scientiae absconditos, illis omnem potestatem in coelo et in terra datam esse, cum fateri oporteat, creditibus Spiritum Sanctum datum esse, qui et ipse omnem potestatem 69] statem in coelo et in terra habet. Ea vero ratione inter Christum, iuxta humanam ipsius naturam, et inter alios sanctos homines nullum discrimen relinqueretur, et Christus maiestate illa sua, quam praee omnibus aliis creaturis ut homo seu secundum humanitatem 70] suam accepit, exueretur. Nulla autem creatura (sive homo, sive angelus) dicere potest aut debet: Mihi data est omnis potestas in coelo et in terra; cum tamen Deus universa divinitatis suae plenitudine, quam ubiand executes His divine power, glory, and efficacy, as the soul does in the body and fire in glowing iron (for by means of these illustrations, as was also mentioned above, the entire ancient Church has explained this doctrine). This was concealed and withheld [for the greater part] at the time of the humiliation; but now, after the form of a servant [or exinanition] has been laid aside, it is fully, powerfully, and publicly exercised before all saints, in heaven and on earth; and in the life to come we shall also behold this His glory face to face, John 17, 24.

Thus there is and remains in Christ only one divine omnipotence, power, majesty, and glory, which is peculiar to the divine nature alone; but it shines, manifests, and exercises itself fully, yet voluntarily, in, with, and through the assumed, exalted human nature in Christ. Just as in glowing iron there are not two kinds of power to shine and burn [as though the fire had a peculiar, and the iron also a peculiar and separate power of shining and burning], but the power to shine and to burn is a property of the fire; but since the fire is united with the iron, it manifests and exercises this its power to shine and to burn in, with, and through the glowing iron, so that thence and from this union also the glowing iron has the power to shine and to burn without conversion of the essence and of the natural properties of fire and iron.

For this reason we understand such testimonies of Scripture as speak of the majesty to which the human nature in Christ is exalted, not in such a way as if the divine majesty, which is peculiar to the divine nature of the Son of God, is in the person of the Son of Man to be ascribed [to Christ] simply and purely according to His divine nature, or that this majesty is to be in the human nature of Christ in such a manner only that from it His human nature should have but the mere title and name per phrasin et modum loquendi (by a phrase and mode of speaking), that is, only in words, but in deed and truth should have no communion whatever with it. For in that way (since God is a spiritual, undivided essence, and therefore present everywhere and in all creatures, and wherever He is, dwelling, however, especially in believers and saints, there He has with Him such majesty of His) it might also be said with truth that in all creatures in whom God is, but especially in believers and saints, in whom He dwells, all the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily, all treasures of wisdom and knowledge are hid, all power in heaven and earth is given, because the Holy Ghost, who has all power, is given them. In this way, then, no distinction would be made between Christ according to His human nature and other holy men, and thus Christ would be deprived of His majesty, which He has received above all creatures, as a man or according to His human nature. For no other creature, neither man nor angel, can or shall say: All power is given unto me in heaven and in earth, since, although God, with all the fulness of His Godhead, which He has everywhere with Himself, is in oder persönlich mit ihnen vereinigt ist wie in Christo. Denn aus solcher persönlichen Vereinigung kommt's, daß Christus auch nach seiner menschlichen Natur spricht Matth. 28: „Mir ist gegeben alle Gewalt im Himmel und auf Erden.“ Item Joh. 13: „Da Christus wußte, daß ihm der Vater alles in seine Hand gegeben hatte.“ Item Kol. 2: „In ihm wohnet die ganze Fülle der Gottheit leibhaftig.“ Item: „Mit Preis und Ehren hast du ihn gekrönt und hast ihn gesetzt über die Werke deiner Hände; alles hast du untertan zu seinen Füßen. In dem, daß er ihm alles hat untertan, hat er nichts gelassen, das ihm nicht untertan sei“, Hebr. 2, „ausgenommen, der ihm alles untertan hat“, 1 Kor. 15.

Wir glauben, lehren und bekennen aber keineswegs eine solche Ausgießung der Majestät Gottes und aller derselben Eigenschaften in die menschliche Natur Christi, dadurch die göttliche Natur geschwächt [entkräftet werde] oder etwas von dem Ehren einem andern übergebe, daß sie nicht für sich selbst behielte, oder daß die menschliche Natur in ihrer Substanz und Wesen gleiche Majestät empfangen haben sollte, von der Natur und Wesen des Sohnes Gottes abgesondert oder unterschieden, als wenn aus einem Gefäß in das andere Wasser, Wein oder Öl gegossen würde. Denn die menschliche Natur wie auch keine andere Kreatur weder im Himmel noch auf Erden [denn die menschliche Natur ebensowenig wie eine andere Kreatur] solchergestalt der Allmächtigkeit Gottes fähig ist, daß sie für sich selbst ein allmächtig Wesen würde oder allmächtige Eigenschaften an und für sich selbst hätte, dadurch die menschliche Natur in Christo gezeugnet und in die Gottheit ganz und gar verwandelt [würde], welches unserm christlichen Glauben, auch aller Propheten und Apostel Lehre zuwider [ist].

Sondern wir glauben, lehren und bekennen, daß Gott der Vater seinen Geist Christo, seinem geliebten Sohn, nach der angenommenen Menschheit, also gegeben (darum er denn auch Messias, das ist, der Gesalbte, genannt [genannt] wird), daß er nicht mit dem Maß wie die andern Heiligen desselben Gaben empfangen habe. Denn auf Christo dem Herrn nach seiner angenommenen menschlichen Natur (weil er nach der Gottheit mit dem Heiligen Geist eines Wesens ist) „ruhet der Geist der Weisheit und des Verstandes, des Rats, der Stärke und der Erkenntnis“, Jes. 11 und 61, nicht also, daß er daher, als ein Mensch, nur etliche Dinge wüßte und vermöchte, wie andere Heilige durch Gottes Geist, welcher allein erschaffene Gaben in ihnen wirkt, wissen und vermögen; sondern, weil Christus nach der Gottheit die andere [die zweite] Person in der heiligen Dreifaltigkeit ist und von ihm wie auch vom Vater der Heilige Geist ausgeht und also sein und des Vaters eigener Geist ist und bleibt in alle Ewigkeit, von dem Sohne Gottes nicht abgesondert, so ist Christo nach dem Fleisch, so mit dem Sohne Gottes persönlich vereinigt ist, die ganze Fülle des Geistes (wie die patres sagen) durch solche persönliche Vereinigung mitgeteilt, welche sich freiwillig mit aller Kraft darin, damit und dadurch beweist und erzeigt, daß er nicht nur etliches wisse und etliches nicht wisse, etliches vermöge und etliches nicht vermöge, sondern er weiß und vermag alles, auf wel-que secum habet, in electis quidem sit, verumtamen non corporaliter in illis habitat, nec personaliter cum illis unitus sit, sicut in Christo corporaliter inhabitat. Nam ratione illius hypostaticae unionis Christus dicit Matth. 28, 18 etiam secundum humanam suam naturam: Mihi data est omnis potestas in coelo et in terra. Et alibi, Ioh. 13, 3: Sciebat Iesus, quod omnia dedisset ei Pater in manus. Item Col. 2, 9: In ipso inhabitat tota divinitatis plenitudo corporaliter. Et Ps. 8, 6; Hebr. 2, 7 sq.: Gloria et honore coronasti eum et constituisti eum super omnia opera manuum tuarum; omnia subieciisti sub pedibus eius, 1 Cor. 15, 27. Dum autem omnia subiecit ei, nihil (excepto eo, qui omnia ei subiecit) reliquit, quod non ipsi subiecerit.

71] Credimus autem, docemus et confitemur, non fieri talem maiestatis Dei et [R. 781] omnium proprietatum eius effusionem in humanam naturam Christi, quae divinae naturae aliquid decedat aut ut de suo alii ita largiatur aliquid, quod hac ratione sibi ipsa non in se retineat, aut quod humana natura in substantia atque essentia sua parem maiestatem acceperit, quae a natura et essentia divinae naturae sit separata et divisa, quasi cum vinum, aqua aut oleum de uno vase in aliud transfunditur. Neque enim vel humana in Christo natura vel ulla alia creatura in coelo aut in terra eo modo omnipotentiae divinae capax est, ut per se omnipotens essentia et natura fiat, aut omnipotentes proprietates in se et per se habeat. Hac enim ratione humana natura in Christo abnegaretur et in divinitatem prorsus transmutaretur. Quod sane et Christianae nostrae fidei et omnium prophetarum et apostolorum doctrinae repugnat.

72] Credimus autem, docemus et confitemur, quod Deus Pater Spiritum suum dilecto Filio suo Christo, ratione assumptae humanitatis, eo modo dederit (unde et Messias, hoc est, Uncti, nomen accepit), ut ille non ad mensuram (quemadmodum alii sancti) illius Spiritus dona acceperit. In Christo enim, Domino nostro (cum secundum divinitatem unius sit cum Spiritu Sancto essentiae), requiescit (ratione humanae naturae) Spiritus sapientiae et intellectus, Spiritus consilii et fortitudinis, Spiritus scientiae et pietatis, Ies. 11, 2; 61, 1; 73] Col. 2, 3. Id vero non eo certe modo fit, quod ille, quatenus homo, aliqua tantum norit et praestare possit, quemadmodum alii sancti virtute Spiritus Sancti (qui tantum dona creata in ipsis efficit) quaedam norunt et praestare possunt. Cum enim Christus, divinitatis ratione, secunda sit Persona in Sacrosancta Trinitate, et ab ipso non minus quam a Patre Spiritus Sanctus procedat (nam et Patris et Filii proprius Spiritus est, manetque in omnem aeternitatem, nec a Filio [R. 782] unquam separatur), certe Christo secundum carnem, quae cum Filio Dei personaliter unita est, tota plenitudo Spiritus (ut patres loquuntur) per hypostaticam illam unionem communicata est. Ea vero liberrime in et cum humana Christi natura et per eam omnem vim suam exerit, non eo modo, ut Christus secun-

the saints, He does not dwell in them bodily, nor is personally united with them as in Christ. For from such personal union it follows that Christ says, even according to His human nature, Matt. 28, 18: All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth. Also John 13, 3: Jesus knowing that the Father had given all things into His hands. Also Col. 2, 9: In Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. Also: Thou crownedst Him with glory and honor, and didst set Him over the works of Thy hands; Thou hast put all things in subjection under His feet. For in that He put all in subjection under Him, He left nothing that is not put under Him, Heb. 2, 7 f.; Ps. 8, 6. He is excepted which did put all things under Him, 1 Cor. 15, 27.

By no means, however, do we believe, teach, and confess such an infusion of the majesty of God and of all its properties into the human nature of Christ by which the divine nature is weakened [by which anything of the divine nature departs], or anything of its own is surrendered to another that it does not retain for itself, or that the human nature in its substance and essence should have received equal majesty, separate or distinct from the nature and essence of the Son of God, as when water, wine, or oil is poured from one vessel into another. For the human nature, as also no other creature, either in heaven or on earth, is capable of the omnipotence of God in such a manner that it would become in itself an almighty essence, or have in and by itself almighty properties; for thereby the human nature in Christ would be denied, and would be entirely converted into the divinity, which is contrary to our Christian faith, as also to the doctrine of all the prophets and apostles.

But we believe, teach, and confess that God the Father has so given His Spirit to Christ, His beloved Son, according to the assumed humanity (on account of which He is called also Messias, i. e., the Anointed), that He has not received His gifts by measure as other saints. For upon Christ the Lord, according to His assumed human nature (because, according to His divinity, He is of one essence with the Holy Ghost), rests the Spirit of wisdom and understanding, the Spirit of counsel and might, the Spirit of knowledge [and of the fear of the Lord, Col. 2, 3; Is. 11, 2; 61, 1], not in such a way that on this account, as a man, He knew and could do only some things, as other saints know and can do by the Spirit of God, who works in them only created gifts, but since Christ, according to His divinity, is the second person in the Holy Trinity, and from Him, as also from the Father, the Holy Ghost proceeds, and thus is and remains His and the Father's own Spirit to all eternity, not separated from the Son of God, therefore (as the Fathers say) the entire fulness of the Spirit has been communicated by the personal union to Christ according to the flesh, which is personally united with the Son of God. This voluntarily manifests and shows itself, with all its power therein, there-with and thereby [in, with, and through the human nature of Christ], so that He [Christ, den der Vater ohne Maß den Geist der Weisheit und Kraft ausgegossen, daß er als Mensch durch solche persönliche Vereinigung alle Erkenntnis, alle Gewalt mit der Tat und Wahrheit empfangen hat. Und also sind alle Schätze der Weisheit in ihm verborgen, also ist ihm alle Gewalt gegeben, und er ist gesetzt zur Rechten der Majestät und Kraft Gottes. Und aus den Historien ist wissentlich [bekannt], daß zur Zeit des Kaisers Valentis unter den Arianern eine sonderliche Sekte gewesen, welche Agnoeten genennet [genannt] sind worden, darum daß sie gedichtet haben, daß der Sohn, des Vaters Wort, wohl alles wisse, aber seine angenommene menschliche Natur sei vieler Dinge unwissend: wider welche auch Gregorius Magnus geschrieben hat.

Agnoetae appellabantur, propterea quod fingerent, Filium quidem utpote Verbum Patris omnia scire, at assumptam ipsius humanam naturam multarum rerum ignaram esse. Hanc haeresim etiam Gregorius Magnus refutavit.

Um diejer persönlichen Vereinigung und daraus erfolgenden Gemeinschaft willen, so die göttliche und menschliche Natur in der Person Christi mit der Tat und Wahrheit miteinander haben, wird Christo nach dem Fleisch zugelegt, daß sein Fleisch seiner Natur und Weisen nach für sich selbst nicht sein und außerhalb diejer Vereinigung nicht haben kann, daß sein Fleisch nämlich eine wahrhaftige, lebendigmachende Speise und sein Blut ein wahrhaftig lebendigmachender Trant ist; wie die zweihundert patres des Ephesini Concilii bezeugt haben: carnem Christi esse vivificam seu vivificatricem, das ist, daß Christus' Fleisch ein lebendigmachend Fleisch sei; daher auch dieser Mensch allein und sonst kein Mensch weder im Himmel noch auf Erden mit Wahrheit sagen kann: Matth. 18: „Wo zwei oder drei in meinem Namen versammelt sind, da bin ich mitten unter ihnen.“ Item [Matth. 28]: „Ich bin allezeit bei euch bis an der Welt Ende.“

Welche Zeugnisse wir auch nicht also verstehen, daß bei uns in der christlichen Kirche und Gemeinde allein die Gottheit Christi gegenwärtig sei, und solche Gegenwartigkeit Christum nach seiner Menschheit in keinem Wege gar nichts angehen sollte, dergestalt denn Petrus, Paulus und alle Heiligen im Himmel, weil die Gottheit, so allenthalben ist, in ihnen wohnt, auch bei uns auf Erden wären, welches doch allein von Christo und sonst keinem andern Menschen die Heilige Schrift bezeugt: sondern wir halten, daß durch diese Worte die Majestät des Menschen Christi erklärt werde, die Christus nach seiner Menschheit zur Rechten der Majestät und Kraft Gottes empfangen [hat], daß er nämlich auch nach und mit derselben seiner angenommenen menschlichen Natur gegenwärtig sein könne und auch sei, wo er will, und sonderlich, daß er bei seiner Kirche und Gemeinde auf Erden als Mittler, Haupt, König und Hoherpriester (nicht halb oder die Hälfte allein, sondern die ganze Person Christi, zu welcher gehören beide Naturen, die göttliche und menschliche) gegenwärtig sei, nicht allein nach seiner Gottheit, sondern auch nach und mit seiner angenommenen menschlichen Natur, nach welcher er unser Bruder ist und wir Fleisch sind von seinem Fleisch und Bein von seinem Bein; wie er des zu gewisser Versicherung und Vergewiss[er]ung sein heilig Abendmahl eingesetzt hat, daß er auch nach der Natur, nach welcher er Fleisch dum humanam suam naturam aliqua tantum norit, aliqua vero ignoret, et quaedam praestare possit, quaedam vero praestare nequeat, sed iam etiam secundum assumptam humanam naturam omnia novit et potest. Pater enim super hunc Filium absque mensura Spiritum sapientiae et fortitudinis ita effudit, ut, quatenus homo est, per hypostaticam illam unionem omnem scientiam et omnem potestatem re ipsa et vere acceperit. Ea ratione omnes thesauri scientiae in Christo sunt absconditi, hoc modo omnis ipsi potestas in coelo et in terra data est, et ipse ad dexteram maiestatis et 75] virtutis Dei collocatus est. Manifestum est autem ex historiis, quod temporibus imperatoris Valentis inter Arianos peculiaris quaedam secta reperta fuerit eorum, qui 76] Propter unionem autem hypostaticam et ex ea consequentem communicationem (quam divina et humana natura in persona Christi revera et re ipsa inter se habent) Christo secundum carnem id tribuitur, quod ipsius caro (in natura et essentia sua per se considerata) non esse et extra unionem illam id non habere potest. Verbi gratia: carni Christi recte ascribitur, quod sit vere vivificus cibus, et quod sanguis eius vere sit vivificus potus. Sic enim ducenti patres Ephesini Concilii pronuntiarunt, carnem Christi esse vivificam seu vivificatricem, unde solus hic homo [R. 783] Iesus Christus (nullus autem alius homo vel in coelo vel in terris) recte et vere dicere potest, Matth. 18, 20: Ubi sunt duo aut tres congregati in nomine meo, ibi sum in medio eorum. Item Matth. 28, 20: Ego vobiscum sum omnibus diebus usque ad consummationem saeculi.

77] Et haec Scripturae testimonia non ita accipimus, quod tantum de praesentia divinitatis Christi in ipsius ecclesia loquantur, quasi ea praesentia ad Christum, qua homo ipse est, prorsus non pertineat. Ea enim ratione Petrus, Paulus et omnes sancti in coelo nobiscum in terris praesentes essent, cum divinitas, quae ubique est, in ipsis habet; id quod tamen de solo Christo et de nullo alio homine Sacra Scriptura testatur. Credi- 78] mus vero, superioribus Scripturae testimoniis maiestatem hominis Christi declarari, quam Christus secundum suam humanitatem ad dexteram maiestatis et virtutis Dei accepit, ut videlicet etiam secundum illam suam assumptam naturam et cum ea praesens esse possit, et quidem praesens sit, ubicunque velit; praesertim vero sentimus, eum ecclesiae suae in terris ut mediatorem, caput, regem et summum sacerdotem praesentem esse. Non autem dimidiatis tantum Christum aut una duntaxat ipsius pars ecclesiae praesto est, sed tota Christi persona. Ad eam autem pertinent ambae naturae, divina et humana, quare eum praesentem habemus non tantum secundum divinam, verum etiam secundum assumptam humanam ipsius naturam, iuxta quam ipse frater noster est, et nos caro sumus de carne 79] eius et os de ossibus eius, Eph. 5, 30. Et according to His human nature] not only knows some things and is ignorant of others, can do some things and is unable to do others, but [according to the assumed human nature] knows and can do all things. For upon Him the Father poured without measure the Spirit of wisdom and power, so that, as man, He has received through this personal union all knowledge and all power in deed and truth. And thus all the treasures of wisdom are hidden in Him, thus all power is given to Him, and He is seated at the right hand of the majesty and power of God. From history it can be learned that at the time of the Emperor Valens there was among the Arians a peculiar sect which was called the Agnoetae, because they imagined that the Son, the Word of the Father, knew indeed all things, but that His assumed human nature is ignorant of many things; against whom also Gregory the Great wrote.

On account of this personal union, and the communion resulting from it, which the divine and the human nature have with one another in the person of Christ in deed and truth, there is ascribed to Christ according to the flesh what His flesh, according to its nature and essence, cannot be of itself, and, apart from this union, cannot have, namely, that His flesh is a truly quickening food and His blood a truly quickening drink; as the two hundred Fathers of the Council of Ephesus have testified, carnem Christi esse vivificam seu vivificatricem, that is, that the flesh of Christ is a quickening flesh [or a quickener]. Hence, too, this man only, and no man besides, either in heaven or on earth, can say with truth, Matt. 18, 20: Where two or three are gathered together in My name, there am I in the midst of them. Also Matt. 28, 20: Lo, I am with you alway, even unto the end of the world.

And these testimonies we do not understand, as though only the divinity of Christ were present with us in the Christian Church and congregation, and such presence were to concern Christ according to His humanity in no way whatever; for in that manner Peter, Paul, and all the saints in heaven, since divinity which is everywhere present dwells in them, would also be with us on earth, which the Holy Scriptures, however, testify only of Christ, and of no other man besides. But we hold that by these words [the above passages of Scripture] the majesty of the man Christ is declared, which Christ has received, according to His humanity, at the right hand of the majesty and power of God, namely, that also according to His assumed human nature and with the same, He can be, and also is, present where He will, and especially that in His Church and congregation on earth He is present as Mediator, Head, King, and High Priest, not in part, or one-half of Him only, but the entire person of Christ is present, to which both natures belong, the divine and the human; not only according to His divinity, but also according to, and with, His assumed human nature, according to which He is our Brother, and we are flesh of His flesh and und Blut hat, bei uns sein, in uns wohnen, wirken und kräftig sein will.

Auf solchen beständigen Grund hat D. Luther selber auch von der Majestät Christi nach seiner menschlichen Natur geschrieben.

In der [in dem] großen Bekenntnis vom Abendmahl schreibt er von der Person Christi also: „Nun er aber ein solcher Mensch ist [* der übernatürlich mit Gott eine Person ist], und außer diesem Menschen kein Gott ist, so muß folgen, daß er auch nach der dritten, übernatürlichen Weise sei und sein möge allenthalben, wo Gott ist, und alles durch und durch voll Christus sei, auch nach der Menschheit, nicht nach der ersten, leiblichen, begreiflichen Weise, sondern nach der übernatürlichen, göttlichen Weise.“ Tom. 2, Wit. Ger., Fol. 191.

„Denn hie mußt du stehen und sagen: Christus nach der Gottheit, wo er ist, da ist er eine natürliche göttliche Person und ist auch natürlich und persönlich daselbst, wie das wohl beweist seine Empfängnis im Mutterleibe. Denn sollte er Gottes Sohn sein, so mußte er natürlich und persönlich im Mutterleibe sein und Mensch werden. Ist er nun natürlich und persönlich, wo er ist, so muß er daselbst auch Mensch sein; denn es sind nicht zwei zertrennte Personen, sondern eine einzige Person: wo sie ist, da ist sie die einzige unzertrennte Person, und wo du kannst sagen: Hie ist Gott, da mußt du auch sagen: So ist Christus der Mensch auch da. Und wo du einen Ort zeigen würdest, da Gott wäre und nicht der Mensch, so wäre die Person schon zertrennt, weil ich alsdann mit der Wahrheit könnte sagen: Hie ist Gott, der nicht Mensch ist und noch nie Mensch [ge]worden.

Im Büchlein von den letzten Worten Davids, welches D. Luther kurz vor seinem Tode geschrieben, sagt er also: „Nach der andern, zeitlichen, menschlichen Geburt ist ihm auch die ewige Gewalt Gottes gegeben, doch zeitlich und nicht von Ewigkeit her. Denn die Menschheit Christi ist nicht von Ewigkeit gewesen wie die Gottheit, sondern wie man zählt und schreibt, ist Jesus, Mariä Sohn, dies Jahr 1543 Jahre alt; aber von dem Augenblick an, da Gottheit und Menschheit ist ver-sane in huius rei confirmationem sacram suam Coenam instituit, ut testaretur, se etiam secundum eam naturam, qua carnem et sanguinem habet, nobiscum esse, in nobis habitare, operari et efficacem esse velle.

81] Is in maiori sua de Coena Domini confessione de persona Christi ad hunc modum scripsit: Cum Christus talis homo sit, qui praeter naturae ordinem cum Deo una est persona, et extra hunc hominem nullus Deus reperitur, necessario conficitur, quod etiam iuxta tertium, supernaturalem illum modum sit et esse possit ubique, ubi Deus est, ita ut omnia plena sint Christi, etiam iuxta humanitatem, non quidem secundum primam illam corporalem et comprehensibilem rationem, sed iuxta supernaturalem divinum illum modum. Tom. 2, Wit. Ger., Fol. 191.

83] Absit autem, ut ego talem Deum agnoscam aut colam. Ex his enim consequeretur, quod locus et spatium possent duas naturas separare et personam Christi dividere, quam tamen neque mors neque omnes diaboli [R. 785 84] dividere aut separare potuerunt. Et quanti tandem, obsecro, pretii esset talis Christus, qui unico tantum loco simul divina et humana persona esset, in omnibus vero locis duntaxat et quidem separatus Deus aut divina persona esset, sine assumpta sua humanitate. Nequaquam vero id tibi, quisquis es, concessero: quin potius, quocunque locorum Deum collocaveris, eo etiam humanitatem Christi una collocare te oportebit; non enim duae in Christo naturae separari aut dividi possunt; una in Christo facta est persona, et Filius Dei assumptam humanitatem a se non segregat.

85] In libello de ultimis verbis Davidis D. Lutherus paulo ante mortem suam in hanc sententiam scripsit: Secundum alteram temporalem humanam nativitatem etiam data est illi aeterna Dei potestas, sed in tempore et non ab aeterno. Humanitas enim Christi non fuit ab aeterno ut divinitas, sed Iesus. Mariae filius, iuxta supputationem veram, hoc anno natus est annos mille quingentos quadraginta tres. Interim tamen ab eo momento, in quo bone of His bone. Even as He has instituted His Holy Supper for the certain assurance and confirmation of this, that also according to that nature according to which He has flesh and blood He will be with us, and dwell, work, and be efficacious in us.

Upon this firm foundation Dr. Luther, of blessed memory, has also written [faithfully and clearly] concerning the majesty of Christ according to His human nature.

In the Large Confession concerning the Lord's Supper he writes thus concerning the person of Christ: Now, since He [Christ] is such a man as is supernaturally one person with God, and apart from this man there is no God, it must follow that also according to the third, supernatural mode He is and can be in every place where God is, and all things are through and through full of Christ, also according to the humanity, not according to the first corporeal, comprehensible mode, but according to the supernatural, divine mode. Vol. 2, Wittenb. Germ., fol. 191.

For here you must stand [confess] and say: Wherever Christ according to the divinity is, there He is a natural, divine person, and He is there also naturally and personally, as His conception in His mother's womb well shows. For if He were to be God's Son, He must naturally and personally be in His mother's womb and become man. Now, if He is naturally and personally wherever He is, He must also be man in the same place. For there are not [in Christ] two separate persons, but only one person: wherever it is, there it is the one undivided person; and wherever you can say, Here is God, there you must also say, Then Christ the man is also there. And if you would point out a place where God is, and not the man, the person would already be divided, because I could then say with truth: Here is God who is not man, and who never as yet has become man.

However, no such a God for me! For it would follow hence that space and place separated the two natures from one another, and divided the person, and yet even death and all devils could not divide or rend them from one another. And there would remain to me a poor sort of Christ [a Christ of how much value, pray?], who would be a divine and human person at the same time in no more than in only one place, while in all other places He must be only a mere separate God and divine person without humanity. No, friend, wherever you place God, there you must also place with Him humanity; they do not allow themselves to be separated or divided from one another. There has been made [in Christ] one person, and it [the Son of God] does not separate from itself the [assumed] humanity.

In the little book concerning the Last Words of David, which Dr. Luther wrote shortly before his death, he says as follows: According to the other, the temporal, human birth, also the eternal power of God has been given Him; however, in time, and not from eternity. For the humanity of Christ has not been from eternity, like the divinity; but, as we reckon and einigt in einer Person, da ist und heißt der Mensch, Mariä Sohn, allmächtiger, ewiger Gott, der ewige Gewalt hat und alles geschaffen hat und erhält, per communicationem idiomatum, darum daß er mit der Gottheit eine Person und auch rechter Gott ist. Davon redet er Matth. 11: „Alles ist mir vom Vater übergeben“; und Matthäi am letzten: „Mir ist alle Gewalt gegeben im Himmel und auf Erden.“ Welchem „mir“? Mir Jesu von Nazareth, Marien Sohn, und Mensch geboren: von Ewigkeit hab' ich sie vom Vater, ehe ich Mensch ward; aber da ich Mensch ward, hab' ich sie zeitlich empfangen nach der Menschheit und heimlich gehalten bis auf meine Auferstehung und Auffahrt, so es [da es] hat sollen offenbart und erklärt werden, wie St. Paulus Röm. 1 spricht: „Er ist erklärt und erweist ein Sohn Gottes kräftiglich.“ Johannes nennt es verkündet, Joh. 17.“ Tom. 5, Ger. Wit., Fol. 545.

Vergleichen Zeugnisse werden in D. Luthers Schriften, besonders aber im Buch „Daß diese Worte noch fest stehen“ und in der [in dem] großen Bekenntnis vom heiligen Abendmahl gefunden, auf welche Schriften als wohlgegründete Erklärungen der Majestät Christi zur Rechten Gottes und seines Testaments wir uns um Kürze willen in diesem Artikel so wohl als im heiligen Abendmahl, inmaßen hervor gemeldet, gezogen [bezogen] haben wollen.

Darum wir es für einen schädlichen Irrtum halten, da Christo nach seiner Menschheit solche Majestät entzogen, dadurch den Christen ihr höchster Trost genommen, den sie in vorangezogener Verheißung von der Gegenwärtigkeit und Beisohnung ihres Hauptes, Königs und Hohenpriesters haben, der ihnen versprochen hat, daß nicht allein seine bloße Gottheit bei ihnen sein werde, welche gegen uns arme Sünder wie ein verzehrendes Feuer gegen dürre Stoppeln ist, sondern Er, Er, der Mensch, der mit ihnen geredet hat, der alle Trübsale in seiner angenommenen menschlichen Natur versucht hat, der auch daher mit uns, als mit Menschen und seinen Brüdern, ein Mit leiden haben kann, der wolle bei uns sein in allen unsern Nöten, auch nach der Natur, nach welcher er unser Bruder ist und wir Fleisch von seinem Fleisch find.

Derhalben verwerfen und verdammen wir einhellig mit Mund und Herzen alle Irrtümer, so der vorsehenden Lehre nicht gemäß als den prophetischen und apostolischen Schriften, den reinen Symbolis und unserer christlichen Augsburgerischen Confession zuwider:

1. Als, da von jemand geglaubt oder gelehrt werden sollte, daß die menschliche Natur um der persönlichen Vereinigung willen mit der göttlichen vermischet oder in dieselbe verwandelt worden sein sollte.

2. Item, daß die menschliche Natur in Christo auf solche Weise wie die Gottheit als ein unendlich Wesen, aus wesentlicher Kraft, auch Eigenschaft ihrer Natur allenthalben gegenwärtig sei.

divinitas cum humanitate unita est in unam personam, homo ille, qui est filius Mariae, revera est et vocatur omnipotens aeternus Deus, qui aeternam habet potestatem, qui omnia creavit et conservat (per communicationem idiomatum), propterea quod cum divinitate una sit persona et verus sit Deus. De ea re loquitur, cum inquit Matth. 11, 27: Omnia mihi tradita sunt a Patre. Et alibi [Matth. 28, 18]: Mihi data est omnis potestas in coelo et in terra. Quis est ille, qui dicit: Mihi? Mihi, videlicet, Iesu Nazareno, Mariae filio nato homini. Ab aeterno quidem habebam eam a Patre, priusquam homo fierem. Cum autem humanam naturam assumerem, accepi eam in tempore secundum humanitatem; occultavi autem eam, donec a morte resurgerem et ad coelos ascenderem; tum ea debebat manifestari et declarari, sicut Paulus dicit Rom. 1, 4, eum declaratum seu demonstratum Filium Dei cum potentia; Iohannes, 17, 10, vocat clarificatum seu glorificatum. Tom. 5, Ger. Wit., Fol. 545.

87] Quare perniciosum errorem esse iudicamus, quando Christo iuxta humanitatem maiestas illa derogatur. Christianis enim ea ratione summa illa consolatio eripitur, quam e promissionibus paulo ante commemoratis de praesentia et inhabitatione capitis, regis et summi sui pontificis haurire poterant. Is enim promisit, non modo nudam suam divinitatem ipsis praesto futuram (quae nobis miseris peccatoribus est tamquam ignis consumens aridissimas stipulas), sed ille ipse, homo ille, qui cum discipulis locutus est, qui omnis generis tribulationes in assumpta sua humana natura gustavit, qui ea de causa nobis (ut et hominibus et fratribus suis) condolare potest, se in omnibus angustiis nostris nobiscum futurum promisit, secundum eam etiam naturam, iuxta quam ille frater noster est et nos caro de carne eius sumus.

88] Reicimus igitur atque unanimi consensu, ore et corde damnamus omnes errores, qui a commemorata pia doctrina dissentiunt, qui cum prophetis et apostolicis scriptis, cum receptis et approbatis Symbolis et cum pia nostra Augustana Confessione pugnant, ut sunt:

89] I. Quod humana natura, propter personalem unionem, cum divinitate sit confusa aut in eam transmutata.

90] II. Quod humana in Christo natura eo modo quo divinitas, ut infinita aliqua essentia, et ex virtute aut proprietate essentiali suae naturae ubique praesens sit.

write, Jesus, the Son of Mary, is 1543 years old this year. But from the instant when divinity and humanity were united in one person, the man, the Son of Mary, is and is called almighty, eternal God, who has eternal might, and has created and sustains all things PER COMMUNICATIONEM IDIOMATUM for the reason that He is one person with the divinity, and is also true God. Of this He speaks Matt. 11, 27: "All things are delivered unto Me of My Father"; and Matt. 28, 18: "All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth." To which Me? To Me, Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of Mary, and born man. From eternity I have it of the Father, before I became man. But when I became man, I received it in time, according to humanity, and kept it concealed until My resurrection and ascension; when it was to be manifested and declared, as St. Paul says, Rom. 1, 4: "He is declared and proved to be a Son of God with power." John [17, 10] calls it "glorified." Vol. 5, Wittenb. Germ., fol. 545.

Similar testimonies are found in Dr. Luther's writings, but especially in the book That These Words Still Stand Firm, and in the Large Confession concerning the Holy Supper; to which writings, as well-grounded explanations of the majesty of Christ at the right hand of God, and of His testament, we would be understood as having referred, for the sake of brevity, in this article, as well as in the Holy Supper, as has been heretofore mentioned.

Therefore we regard it as a pernicious error when such majesty is denied to Christ according to His humanity. For thereby the very great consolation is taken from Christians which they have in the aforesaid promise concerning the presence and dwelling with them of their Head, King, and High Priest, who has promised them that not only His mere divinity would be with them, which to us poor sinners is as a consuming fire to dry stubble, but that He, He, the man who has spoken with them, who has tried all tribulations in His assumed human nature, and who can therefore have sympathy with us, as with men and His brethren, — He will be with us in all our troubles also according to the nature according to which He is our brother and we are flesh of His flesh.

Therefore we unanimously reject and condemn, with mouth and heart, all errors not in accordance with the doctrine presented, as contrary to the prophetic and apostolic Scriptures, the pure [received and approved] symbols, and our Christian Augsburg Confession:

1. As, when it is believed or taught by any one that on account of the personal union the human nature is mingled with the divine or is changed into it.

2. Also, that the human nature in Christ is everywhere present in the same mode as the divinity, as an infinite essence, by essential power and property of its nature.

3. Item, daß die menschliche Natur in Christo der göttlichen Natur an ihrer Substanz und Wesen oder an derselben wesentlichen Eigenschaften equiquiert und gleich [ge]worden sei.

4. Item, daß die Menschheit Christi in alle Orte des Himmels und der Erde räumlich ausgespannt sei, welches auch der Gottheit nicht soll zugemessen werden. Daß aber Christus durch seine göttliche Allmacht mit seinem Leibe, den er gesetzt hat zu der Rechten der Majestät und Kraft Gottes, gegenwärtig sein könne, wo er will, sonderlich da er solche seine Gegenwartigkeit, als im heiligen Abendmahl, in seinem Wort versprochen, daß kann seine Allmacht und Weisheit wohl verschaffen ohne Verwandlung oder Abtilgung seiner wahren menschlichen Natur.

5. Item, daß die bloße menschliche Natur Christi für uns gelitten und uns erlöst habe, mit welcher der Sohn Gottes im Leiden gar keine Gemeinschaft gehabt.

6. Item, daß Christus allein nach seiner Gottheit bei uns auf Erden bei dem gepredigten Wort und rechtem Brauch der heiligen Sacramente gegenwärtig sei, und solche Gegenwartigkeit Christi seine angenommene menschliche Natur ganz und gar nichts angehe.

7. Item, daß die angenommene menschliche Natur in Christo mit der göttlichen Kraft, Gewalt, Weisheit, Majestät und Herrlichkeit ganz und gar keine Gemeinschaft mit der Tat und Wahrheit, sondern allein den bloßen Titel und Namen gemein habe.

Diese Irrtümer und alle, so der obgesetzten Lehre zuwider und entgegen [sind], verwerfen und verdammen wir als dem reinen Wort Gottes, der heiligen Propheten und Apostel Schriften und unserm christlichen Glauben und Bekenntnis zuwider und vermahnen alle Christen (dieweil Christus ein Geheimnis in der heiligen Schrift genennet [genannt] wird, darüber alle Ketzer den Kopf zerstoßen), daß sie nicht vorwühigerweise mit ihrer Vernunft in solchen Geheimnissen grübeln, sondern mit den lieben Aposteln einfältig glauben, die Augen der Vernunft zuschließen und ihren Verstand in den Gehorsam Christi gefangen nehmen und sich dessen trösten und also ohne Unterlaß freuen, daß unser Fleisch und Blut in Christo so hoch zu der Rechten der Majestät und allmächtigen Kraft Gottes gesetzt [ist]. So werden wir gewißlich in aller Widerwärtigkeit beständigen Trost finden und vor schädlichem Irrtum wohl bewahrt bleiben.

IX.

Von der Höllenfahrt Christi.

Und weil auch bei den alten christlichen Kirchlehrern sowohl als bei etlichen unter den unsern ungleiche Erklärung des Artikels von der Höllenfahrt Christi gefunden [wird], lassen wir es gleichergefalt bei der Einsalt unsers christlichen Glaubens bleiben, darauf uns D. Luther in der Predigt zu Torgau im Schloß, so Anno 33 usw. von der Höllenfahrt Christi gehalten, gewiesen hat, da wir bekennen: „Ich glaube an den Herrn Christum, Gottes Sohn, gestorben, begraben und zur Hölle gefahren.“ In welchem denn, als unter-

91] III. Quod humana natura in [R. 787] Christo divinae naturae substantia seu essentia sua aut in suis essentialibus proprietatibus exaequata sit.

92] IV. Quod humanitas Christi in omnia loca coeli et terrae localiter extensa sit, quod tamen ne quidem divinitati tribui debet. Quod autem Christus per divinam omnipotentiam suam corpore suo (quod ad dexteram maiestatis et virtutis Dei collocavit) praesens esse possit, ubicunque voluerit, ibique imprimis, ubi suam praesentiam illam, ut in sacra sua Coena, in Verbo suo promisit, hoc ipsius omnipotentia et sapientia optime efficere potest sine transmutatione aut abolitione verae suae humanae naturae.

95] VII. Quod assumpta humana natura in Christo cum divina virtute, sapientia, potentia, maiestate et gloria re ipsa et vere nullam habeat communicationem, sed quod tantum titulo et nomine nudo cum divinitate communicet.

96] Hos errores et alios omnes, a pia et sincera doctrina paulo ante commemorata dissentientes, reicimus atque damnamus, ut qui Verbo Dei, prophetis et apostolicis scriptis et Christianae nostrae fidei et confessioni repugnent. Et hortamur omnes pias mentes (quandoquidem Christus in Sacra Scriptura mysterium vocatur, ad quod omnes haeretici capitibus suis impingunt), ne sua ratione humana in tantis mysteriis perscrutandis curiosae sint, sed potius cum apostolis Christi simpliciter credant, oculos rationis suae claudant et intellectum suum in Christi [R. 788] obedientiam captivent [2 Cor. 10, 5], inde autem dulcissimam et firmissimam consolationem petant atque sibi perpetuo gratulentur, quod caro nostra et sanguis noster in Christo in tantam sublimitatem ad dexteram maiestatis et omnipotentis virtutis Dei sit collocata. Sic in omnibus adversis invenimus, quo nos solide consolemur et ab omnibus perniciosus erroribus praeservemur.

IX.

DE DESCENSU CHRISTI AD INFEROS.

1] Constat, hunc fidei nostrae articulum de descensu Christi ad inferos non modo a quibusdam recentioribus, verum etiam olim ab orthodoxis veteribus ecclesiae doctoribus non prorsus eodem modo explicatum esse. Nos igitur tutissimum iudicamus, si simplicitatem fidei nostrae, in Symbolo comprehensam, retineamus, ad quam D. Lutherus pia sua concione, in arce Torgensi anno Domini MDXXXIII de Christi ad inferos descensu habita, remisit, ubi confitemur, quod credamus in Iesum Chri-

3. Also, that the human nature in Christ has become equal to and like the divine nature in its substance and essence or in its essential properties.

4. Also, that the humanity of Christ is locally extended in all places of heaven and earth; which is to be ascribed not even to the divinity. But that Christ, by His divine omnipotence can be present with His body, which He has placed at the right hand of the majesty and power of God, wherever He will, especially where He has, in His Word, promised this His presence, as in the Holy Supper, this His omnipotence and wisdom can well accomplish without change or abolition of His true human nature.

5. Also, that the mere human nature of Christ has suffered for us and redeemed us, with which the Son of God is said to have had no communion whatever in suffering.

6. Also, that Christ is present with us on earth in the Word preached and in the right use of the holy Sacraments only according to His divinity, and that this presence of Christ does not in any way pertain to His assumed human nature.

7. Also, that the assumed human nature in Christ has in deed and truth no communion whatever with the divine power, might, wisdom, majesty, and glory, but has in common only the mere title and name.

These errors, and all that are contrary and opposed to the [godly and pure] doctrine presented above, we reject and condemn as contrary to the pure Word of God, the Scriptures of the holy prophets and apostles, and our Christian faith and confession. And we admonish all Christians, since in the Holy Scriptures Christ is called a mystery upon which all heretics dash their heads, not to indulge in a presumptuous manner in subtile inquiries, concerning such mysteries, with their reason, but with the venerated apostles simply to believe, to close the eyes of their reason, and bring into captivity their understanding to the obedience of Christ, 2 Cor. 10, 5, and to take comfort [seek most delightful and sure consolation], and hence to rejoice without ceasing in the fact that our flesh and blood is placed so high at the right hand of the majesty and almighty power of God. Thus we shall assuredly find constant consolation in every adversity, and remain well guarded from pernicious error.

IX.

OF THE DESCENT OF CHRIST TO HELL.

And since even in the ancient Christian teachers of the Church, as well as in some among our teachers, dissimilar explanations of the article concerning the descent of Christ

schießliche Artikel, die Begräbnis und Höllenfahrt [das Begräbnis und die Höllenfahrt] Christi unterschieden [werden], und wir einfältig glauben, daß die ganze Person, Gott und Mensch, nach der [nach dem] Begräbnis zur Hölle gefahren [sei], den Teufel überwunden, der Hölle Gewalt gestört und dem Teufel alle seine Macht genommen habe. Wie aber solches zugegangen, sollen wir uns mit hohen, spitzigen Gedanken nicht bekümmern; denn dieser Artikel ebensowenig als der vorhergehende (wie Christus zur Rechten der allmächtigen Kraft und Majestät Gottes gesetzt) mit Vernunft und fünf Sinnen sich begreifen läßt, sondern will allein geglaubt und an dem Wort gehalten sein. So behalten wir den Kern und Trost, daß uns und alle, die an Christum glauben, weder Hölle noch Teufel gefangennehmen noch schaden können. [Zu der Predigt Luthers von der Höllenfahrt Christi, auf welche sich der neunte Artikel der Kontordienformel bezieht, heißt es u. a., wie folgt: „Weil wir nun den Herrn Christum begraben haben und gehört, wie er aus diesem Leben geschieden ist, müssen wir ihn auch wieder herausheben und den Ostertag begehen, an welchem er in ein ander, neues Leben getreten ist, da er nicht mehr sterben kann, und ein Herr worden über Tod und alle Kreatur im Himmel und Erden. Welches zeugt auch dieser Artikel, da wir sprechen: ‚Niedergefahren zur Hölle, am dritten Tage wieder auferstanden von den Toten.‘ — Denn ehe er auferstanden und gen Himmel gefahren ist und noch im Grabe lag, ist er auch hinunter zur Hölle gefahren, auf daß er auch uns, die da sollten darinnen gefangen liegen, daraus erlösete; wie er auch darum in den Tod gekommen und ins Grab gelegt war, daß er die Seinen daraus holete. Ich will aber diesen Artikel nicht hoch und scharf handeln, wie es zugegangen sei, oder was da heiße, zur Hölle fahren, sondern bei dem einfältigsten Verstand bleiben, wie diese Worte lauten, wie man's Kindern und Einfältigen vorbilden muß. Denn es sind wohl viel gewesen, die solches mit Vernunft und fünf Sinnen haben wollen fassen, aber damit nichts getroffen noch erlangt, sondern nur weiter vom Glauben gegangen und abgeführt. Darum ist dies das Allerhöchste, wer da will recht fahren und nicht anlaufen, daß er nur bleibe bei den Worten und dieselben ihm einfältiglich einbilde, aufs beste er kann. — Demnach pflegt man's auch also an die Wände zu malen, wie Christus hinunterfährt, mit einer Chorlappe und mit einer Fahne in der Hand vor die Hölle kommt und damit den Teufel schlägt und verjagt, die Hölle stürmt und die Seinen herausholt. Wie man auch in der Osternacht ein Spiel für die Kinder getrieben hat. Und gefällt mir wohl, daß man's also den Einfältigen vormalt, spielt, singt oder sagt, und soll's auch dabei bleiben lassen, daß man nicht viel mit hohen, spitzigen Gedanken sich bekümmere, wie es möge zugegangen sein, weil es ja nicht leiblich geschehen ist, sondern er die drei Tage ja im Grabe ist geblieben.“ — „Denn solch Gemälde zeigt fein die Kraft und Ruh dieses Artikels, darum er geschehen, gepredigt und geglaubt wird, wie Christus der Hölle Gewalt zerstört und dem Teufel alle seine Macht genommen habe. Wenn ich das habe, so habe ich den rechten Kern und Verstand davon und soll nicht weiter fragen noch klügeln, wie es zugegangen oder möglich sei, eben als auch in andern Artikeln solch Klügeln und Meistern der Vernunft verboten ist, und auch nichts erlangen kann.“ — „Und ist ohne Zweifel von den alten Vätern so auf uns [ge]kommen, das sie davon geredet und gesungen haben; wie auch noch die alten Lieder klingen und wir am Ostertage singen: ‚Der die Hölle zerbrach und den leidigen Teufel darinne band‘ usw. Denn wenn ein Kind oder Einfältiger solches hört, so denkt er nicht anders, denn daß Christus den Teufel habe überwunden und ihm alle seine Gewalt genommen. Das ist recht und christlich gedacht, die rechte Wahrheit und dieses Artikels Meinung getroffen, obwohl nicht nach der Schärfe davon geredet noch so eben ausgedrückt, wie es geschehen ist. Aber was liegt daran, wenn mir's meinen Glauben nicht verderbet und den rechten Verstand nicht klar und helle gibt, den ich davon fassen soll und kann? Und ob ich gleich lange scharf suche, doch nichts mehr davon fassen kann, sondern viel eher den rechten Verstand verliere, wo ich nicht wohl verwahrt an dem Wort festhalte.“ — „Das rede ich darum, weil ich sehe, daß die Welt jetzt will klug sein, in's Teufels Namen und in den Artikeln des Glaubens nach ihrem Kopf meistern und alles ausgründen. Also hie, wenn sie hört, daß Christus zur Hölle gefahren ist, fährt sie zu und will's sobald auspelustern, wie es zugegangen sei, und macht viel weislaustiger, unnützer Fragen: Ob die Seele allein hinuntergefahren sei, oder ob die Gottheit bei ihr gewesen sei; item, was er daselbst getan habe, und wie er mit den Teufeln umgegangen sei; und dergleichen viel, davon sie doch nichts wissen kann. Wir aber sollen solche unnütze Fragen lassen fahren und schlecht einfältiglich unser Herz und Gedanken an die Worte des Glaubens besten und binden, welcher sagt: Ich glaube an den Herrn Christum, Gottes Sohn, gestorben, begraben und zur Hölle gefahren, daß ich, an die ganze Person, Gott und Mensch, mit Leib und Seele, ungeteilt, von der Jungfrau geboren, gelitten, gestorben und begraben ist; also soll ich's hie auch nicht teilen, sondern glauben und sagen, daß derselbige Christus, Gott und Mensch in einer Person, zur Hölle gefahren, aber nicht darinnen geblieben ist, wie Ps. 16, 10 von ihm sagt: ‚Du wirst meine Seele nicht in der Hölle lassen, noch zugeben, daß dein Heiliger die Verwesung sehe.‘ Seele aber heißt er nach der Schrift Sprache nicht, wie wir, ein abgesondert Wesen vom Leibe, sondern stum, Dominum nostrum, Filium Dei, qui mortuus, sepultus est et ad inferos descendit; in qua confessione videmus, sepulturam et descensum Christi ad inferos tamquam diversos articulos distinguui. Simpliciter igitur credimus, quod tota persona, Deus et homo, post sepulturam ad inferos descenderit, Satanam devicerit, potestatem inferorum everterit et diabolo omnem vim et potentiam eripuerit. 3) Quomodo vero Christus id effecerit, non est, ut argutis et sublimibus imaginationibus scrutemur. Hic enim articulus non magis ratione humana et sensibus comprehendi potest quam prior, quomodo Christus ad [R. 789] dexteram omnipotentis virtutis et maiestatis Dei sit collocatus. In his ergo mysteriis fides duntaxat est adhibenda, et Verbum Dei firmo assensu retinendum est. Sic solidam doctrinam et veram consolationem (quod videlicet neque Satan neque ipsi inferi nos omnesque alios in Christum credentes in potestatem suam redigere aut nobis nocere valeant) ex hoc articulo hauriemus. [Tom. 6., Ien., fol. 77.]

to hell are found, we abide in like manner by the simplicity of our Christian faith [comprised in the Creed], to which Dr. Luther in his sermon, which was delivered in the castle at Torgau in the year 1533, concerning the descent of Christ to hell, has pointed us, where we confess: I believe in the Lord Christ, God's Son, our Lord, dead, buried, and descended into hell. For in this [Confession] the burial and descent of Christ to hell are distinguished as different articles; and we simply believe that the entire person, God and man, after the burial descended into hell, conquered the devil, destroyed the power of hell, and took from the devil all his might. We should not, however, trouble ourselves with high and acute thoughts as to how this occurred; for with our reason and our five senses this article can be comprehended as little as the preceding one, how Christ is placed at the right hand of the almighty power and majesty of God; but we are simply to believe it and adhere to the Word [in such mysteries of faith]. Thus we den ganzen Menschen, wie er sich nennt den Heiligen Gottes.“ — „Wie aber solches möge zugegangen sein, daß der Mensch da im Grabe liegt und doch zur Hölle fährt, daß sollen und müssen wir wohl unergründet und unerfanden lassen; denn es ist freilich nicht leiblich noch greiflich zugegangen, ob man's wohl grob und leiblich malen und denken muß und so davon reden durch Gleichnisse. Als, wenn ein starker Held oder Riese in ein fest Schloß käme mit seinem Heer und Panier und Waffen und dasselbige zerstörte und den Feind darinnen finge und bünde ufm. Darum sage nur einfältiglich also, wenn man dich fragt von diesem Artikel, wie es zugegangen sei: Das weiß ich wahrlich nicht, werde es auch nicht erdenken noch ausreden können; aber grob kann ich dir's wohl malen und in ein Bild fassen, von verborgenen Sachen sein klar und deutlich zu reden: daß er ist hingegangen und die Fahne genommen als ein siegender Held und damit die Tore aufgestoßen und unter den Teufeln rumort, daß hie einer zum Fenster, dort einer zum Loch hinausgefallen ist.“ — „Das sei nun aufs einfältigste von diesem Artikel geredet, daß man an den Worten halte und bei diesem Hauptstücke bleibe, daß uns durch Christum die Hölle zerrissen und des Teufels Reich und Gewalt gar zerstört ist, um welches willen er gestorben, begraben und hinuntergefahren ist, daß sie uns nicht mehr soll schaden noch überwältigen, wie er Matth. 16, 18 selbst sagt.“ (Walch 10, 1354 f.; E. A. 20, 165 f.; St. X. 10, 1125 ff.)

Von Kirchengebräuchen,

so man Adiaphora oder Mittelbänge nennt.

Von Ceremonien und Kirchengebräuchen, welche in Gottes Wort weder geboten noch verboten sind, sondern guter Meinung in die Kirche eingeführt werden um guter Ordnung und Wohlstands [Wohlanstands] willen, oder sonst christliche Zucht zu erhalten, ist gleichermaßen ein Zwiespalt unter etlichen Theologen Augsburger Konfession entstanden, da der eine Teil gehalten, daß man auch zu der Zeit der Verfolgung und im Fall der Bekenntnis [im Fall des Bekenntnisses], wenn die Feinde des heiligen Evangelii sich gleich mit uns in der Lehre nicht vergleichen, dennoch mit unterlegtem Gewissen etliche gefallene Ceremonien, so an ihm selbst [so an sich] Mittelbänge und von Gott weder geboten noch verboten [sind], auf der Widersacher Dringen und Erfordern wiederum aufrichten, und man sich also mit ihnen in solchen adiaphoris oder Mittelbängen wohl vergleichen möge. Der andere Teil aber hat gestritten, daß zur Zeit der Verfolgung im Fall der Bekenntnis [im Fall des Bekenntnisses], sonderlich wenn die Widersacher damit umgehen, daß sie entweder durch Gewalt und Zwang oder hinterlistigerweise die reine Lehre unterdrücken und ihre falsche Lehre in unsere Kirche gemächlich wieder einschleichen mögen, solches, wie gesagt, auch in Mittelbängen mit unterlegtem Gewissen und ohne Nachteil der göttlichen Wahrheit keineswegs geschehen könnte.

Diesen Streit zu erklären und durch Gottes Gnade endlich hinzulegen [beizulegen], geben wir dem christlichen Leser hiervon diesen einfältigen Bericht.

Nämlich, wenn solche Dinge unter dem Titel und Schein der äußerlichen Mittelbänge vorgegeben werden, welche (ob ihnen gleich eine andere Farbe angestrichen würde) dennoch im Grunde wider Gottes Wort sind, daß dieselben nicht als freie Mittelbänge gehalten, sondern als von Gott verbotene Dinge gemieden sollen werden; wie auch unter die rechten freien adiaphora oder Mittelbänge nicht sollen gerechnet werden solche Ceremonien, die den Schein haben oder, dadurch Verfolgung zu vermeiden, den Schein vorgeben wollten, als wäre unsere Religion mit der papistischen nicht weit voneinander, oder wäre uns dieselbe ja nicht hoch entgegen, oder wenn solche Ceremonien dahin gemeint, also erfordert oder aufge-

DE CEREMONIIS ECCLESIASTICIS,
quae vulgo adiaphora seu res mediae
et indifferentes vocantur.

1) Ortum est etiam inter quosdam Augustanae Confessionis theologos dissidium de ceremoniis ecclesiasticis, quae Verbo Dei neque mandatae neque prohibitae sunt, sed bono consilio propter utramque et ordinem aut ad conservandam piam disciplinam in ecclesia 2) usurpantur. Una pars sensit, quod persecutionis tempore (quando confessio fidei edenda est), etiamsi adversarii evangelii in doctrina nobiscum non consentiant, tamen sana et salva conscientia liceat, quasdam dudum abrogatas ceremonias (quae per se adiaphorae et a Deo neque praeceptae neque prohibitae sunt) postulantes id et urgentibus adversariis restituere et hoc modo cum iis in rebus illis per se adiaphoris conformem quandam rationem instituere posse. Altera 3) vero pars contendit, quod persecutionis tempore (quando confessio fidei requiritur) adversariis illaesa conscientia et sine iactura veritatis coelestis restitutione rerum adiaphorarum gratificari non possimus; praesertim quando adversarii hoc agunt, ut aut vi manifesta aut occultis machinationibus sinceram doctrinam opprimant et paulatim falsa [R. 790] dogmata in ecclesias nostras reducant.

4) Ut autem haec etiam controversia pie declararetur et tandem per Dei gratiam componatur, candido lectori simplicem et Verbo Dei conformem sententiam nostram aperiemus.

5) Si quando talia sub titulo et praetextu externarum rerum adiaphorarum proponuntur, quae (licet alius color illis inducatur) revera Verbo Dei adversantur: ea nequaquam pro rebus adiaphoris habenda, sed tamquam Verbo Dei prohibita vitanda sunt. Et sane inter res adiaphoras non numerandae sunt tales ceremoniae, quae speciem quandam prae se ferunt, aut quibus (ad effugiendam persecutionem) simulatur, quasi nostra religio a pontificia non multum distaret, aut certe, quasi ab ea non admodum animus noster abhorreret, aut cum eiusmodi ceremoniae in eum finem restaurantur et earum restauratio ita accipitur, quasi hoc ipso dissentientes duae illae retain the substance [sound doctrine] and [true] consolation that neither hell nor the devil can take captive or injure us and all who believe in Christ.

X.

Which are [Commonly] Called Adiaphora, or Matters of Indifference.

Concerning ceremonies and church rites which are neither commanded nor forbidden in God's Word, but are introduced into the Church with a good intention, for the sake of good order and propriety, or otherwise to maintain Christian discipline, a dissension has likewise arisen among some theologians of the Augsburg Confession: the one side holding that also in time of persecution and in case of confession [when confession of faith is to be made], even though the enemies of the Gospel do not come to an agreement with us in doctrine, yet some ceremonies, abrogated [long since], which in themselves are adiaphora, and neither commanded nor forbidden by God, may, without violence to conscience, be re-established in compliance with the pressure and demand of the adversaries, and thus in such [things which are of themselves] adiaphora, or matters of indifference, we may indeed come to an agreement [have conformity] with them. But the other side contended that in time of persecution, in case of confession, especially when it is the design of the adversaries, either through force and compulsion, or in an insidious manner, to suppress the pure doctrine, and gradually to introduce again into our churches their false doctrine, this, also in adiaphora, can in no way be done, as has been said, without violence to conscience and prejudice to the divine truth.

To explain this controversy, and by God's grace finally to settle it, we present to the Christian reader this simple statement regarding the matter [in conformity with the Word of God]:

Namely, when under the title and pretext of external adiaphora such things are proposed as are in principle contrary to God's Word (although painted another color), these are not to be regarded as adiaphora, in which one is free to act as he will, but must be avoided as things prohibited by God. In like manner, too, such ceremonies should not be reckoned among the genuine free adiaphora, or matters of indifference, as make a show or feign the appearance, as though our religion and that of the Papists were not far apart, thus to avoid persecution, or as though the latter were not at least highly offensive to us; or when such ceremonies are designed for the purpose, and required and received in this sense, as though by and through them both contrary religions were reconciled and became one body; or when a reentering into the Papacy and a departure from the pure docnommen [verstanden werden], als ob damit und dadurch beide widerwärtigen Religionen verglichen und e i n Korpus [ge]worden, oder wiederum ein Zutritt zum Papsttum und ein Abweichen von der reinen Lehre des Evangelii und wahren Religion geschehen oder gemächlich daraus erfolgen sollte.

Denn in diesem Fall soll und muß gelten, daß Paulus schreibt 2 Kor. 6: „Ziehet nicht am fremden Joch; was hat das Nütze für Gemeinschaft mit der Finsternis? Darum gehet aus von ihnen und sondert euch ab, spricht der Herr“ usw.

Gleichfalls sind das auch nicht rechte adiaphora oder Mittelbdinge, wenn es unnütze, nährische Spektakel [Schauspiele] sind, so weder zu guter Ordnung, christlicher Disziplin oder evangelischem Wohlstand in der Kirche nützlich [sind].

Sondern was rechte adiaphora oder Mittelbdinge (wie die vor[hin] erklärt) sind, glauben, lehren und bekennen wir, daß solche Ceremonien an ihnen und für sich selbst kein Gottesdienst, auch kein Teil desselben [sind], sondern von solchen gebührend unterschieden werden sollen, wie geschrieben steht: „Vergeblich dienen sie mir, dieweil sie lehren solche Lehren, die nichts denn Menschengebote sind“, Matth. 15.

Demnach glauben, lehren und bekennen wir, daß die Gemeinde Gottes jedes Ortes und jeder Zeit derselben Gelegenheit nach guten Frug, Gewalt und Macht habe, dieselben ohne Leichtfertigkeit und Argernis ordentlicher- und gebührenderweise zu ändern, zu mindern und zu mehrern, wie es jederzeit zu guter Ordnung, christlicher Disziplin und Zucht, evangelischem Wohlstand und zur Erbauung der Kirche am nützlichsten, förderlichsten und besten angesehen wird. Wie man auch den Schwachen im Glauben in solchen äußerlichen Mittelbdingen mit gutem Gewissen weichen und nachgeben könne, lehrt Paulus Röm. 14 und beweist es mit seinem Exempel Act. 16 und 21; 1 Kor. 9.

Wir glauben, lehren und bekennen auch, daß zur Zeit der Bekenntnis [des Bekenntnisses], da die Feinde Gottes Wort die reine Lehre des heiligen Evangelii begehren unterzudrücken [zu unterdrücken], die ganze Gemeinde Gottes, ja ein jeder Christenmensch, besonders aber die Diener des Wortes als die Vorsteher der Gemeinde Gottes schuldig seien, vermöge Gottes Wort die Lehre und was zur ganzen Religion gehört, frei öffentlich nicht allein mit Worten, sondern auch im Werk und mit der Tat zu bekennen; und daß alsdann in diesem Fall auch in solchen Mittelbdingen den Widerstehern nicht zu weichen, noch leiden sollen, ihnen [sich] dieselben von den Feinden zur Schwächung des rechten Gottesdienstes und Pflanzung und Bestätigung der Abgötterei mit Gewalt oder hinterlistig aufdringen zu lassen; wie geschrieben steht Gal. 5: „So bestehet nun in der Freiheit, damit uns Christus befreiet hat, und laßt euch nicht wiederum in das fleischliche Joch fangen!“ Item Gal. 2: „Da etliche falsche Brüder sich mit eingedrungen und neben eingeschlichen waren, zu verunstalten unsere Freiheit, die wir haben in Christo Jesu, daß sie uns gefangen-religiones iam in unam redactae essent atque in unum corpus coaluissent, aut cum periculum est, ne videamur ad papatum rursum accessisse et a sincera evangelii doctrina recessisse vel paulatim recessuri.

6) In hoc enim rerum statu maximum pondus habere debet illud apostoli dictum, 2 Cor. 6, 14. 17: Nolite iugum ducere cum infidelibus. Quae enim participatio iustitiae cum iniquitate, aut quae societas luci ad tenebras etc.? Propter quod exite de medio eorum et separamini, dicit Dominus.

7) Sed et haec non sunt vera adiaphora, quae neque ad observandum bonum ordinem, neque ad piam disciplinam conservandam, neque ad εὐραξίαν in ecclesia constituendam quidquam conferunt, sed praeter inutiles nugae et puerilia spectacula nihil habent.

8) De rebus autem illis, quae revera [R. 791] sunt adiaphorae (quarum supra mentionem fecimus), haec est fides, doctrina et confessio nostra, quod eiusmodi ceremoniae per se non sint cultus Dei, neque etiam pars cultus divini, sed inter illas et veros Dei cultus diligenter discernendum esse iudicamus. Scriptum est enim de humanis traditionibus Matth. 15, 9: Frustra colunt me, docentes doctrinas, mandata hominum.

9) Credimus autem, docemus et confitemur, quod ecclesia Dei, quibusvis temporibus et locis, pro re nata, liberrimam potestatem habeat (in rebus vere adiaphoris) aliquid mutandi, abrogandi, constituendi, si tamen id absque levitate et scandalo, decenter et bono ordine fiat, et si accurate expendatur, quid singulis temporibus ad conservandum bonum ordinem et ad piam retinendam disciplinam atque ad εὐραξίαν evangelica professione dignam et ad ecclesiae aedificationem quam plurimum faciat. Quousque etiam infirmis in fide in rebus illis externis bona cum conscientia cedere possimus, apostolus Paulus perspicue non modo verbis, verum etiam suo ipsius exemplo docuit, Rom. 14; Act. 16, 3; 21, 26; 1 Cor. 9, 19.

10) Credimus, docemus et confitemur, quod eo tempore, quo veritatis coelestis confessio requiritur (quando videlicet Verbi Dei hostes doctrinam evangelii opprimere student), tota ecclesia et singuli Christiani, praecipue vero ministri Verbi Dei tamquam ii, quos Dominus ecclesiae suae regendae praefecit, teneantur piam doctrinam iuxta Verbum Dei, et quidquid omnino ad sinceram religionem pertinet, palam et libere non modo verbis, verum etiam factis profiteri. Et sentimus tali tempore, etiam in rebus vere et per se adiaphoris, non esse adversariis cedendum neque permittendum, ut adversarii nobis talia adiaphora (ad detrimentum veri cultus divini et ad [R. 792] plantandam et stabilendam idolatriam) observanda imponant et obtrudant, sive id mani- 11) festa vi sive dolis efficere conentur. Scriptum est enim Gal. 5, 1: In libertate igitur, qua Christus nos liberavit, state et ne rursus iugo servitutis implicemini. Et in eadem epistola, 2, 4 sq.: Propter subintroductos falsos fratres, qui subintrocerant explorare libertatem nostram, quam habemus in Christo Iesu, trine of the Gospel and true religion should occur or gradually follow therefrom [when there is danger lest we seem to have reentered the Papacy, and to have departed, or to be on the point of departing gradually, from the pure doctrine of the Gospel].

For in this case what Paul writes, 2 Cor. 6, 14, 17, shall and must obtain: Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers: for what communion hath light with darkness? Wherefore come out from among them and be ye separate, saith the Lord.

Likewise, when there are useless, foolish displays, that are profitable neither for good order nor Christian discipline, nor evangelical propriety in the Church, these also are not genuine adiaphora, or matters of indifference.

But as regards genuine adiaphora, or matters of indifference (as explained before), we believe, teach, and confess that such ceremonies, in and of themselves, are no worship of God, nor any part of it, but must be properly distinguished from such as are, as it is written: In vain they do worship Me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men, Matt. 15, 9.

Therefore we believe, teach, and confess that the congregation of God of every place and every time has, according to its circumstances, the good right, power, and authority [in matters truly adiaphora] to change, to diminish, and to increase them, without thoughtlessness and offense, in an orderly and becoming way, as at any time it may be regarded most profitable, most beneficial, and best for [preserving] good order, [maintaining] Christian discipline [and for εὐραξία worthy of the profession of the Gospel], and the edification of the Church. Moreover, how we can yield and give way with a good conscience to the weak in faith in such external adiaphora, Paul teaches Rom. 14, and proves it by his example, Acts 16, 3; 21, 26; 1 Cor. 9, 10.

We believe, teach, and confess also that at the time of confession [when a confession of the heavenly truth is required], when the enemies of God's Word desire to suppress the pure doctrine of the holy Gospel, the entire congregation of God, yea, every Christian, but especially the ministers of the Word, as the leaders of the congregation of God [as those whom God has appointed to rule His Church], are bound by God's Word to confess freely and openly the [godly] doctrine, and what belongs to the whole of [pure] religion, not only in words, but also in works and with deeds; and that then, in this case, even in such [things truly and of themselves] adiaphora, they must not yield to the adversaries, or permit these [adiaphora] to be forced upon them by their enemies, whether by violence or cunning, to the detriment of the true worship of God and the introduction and sanction of idolatry. For it is written, Gal. 5, 1: Stand fast, therefore, in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not again entangled in the yoke of bondage. Also Gal. 2, 4 f.: And that because of false brethren unawares brought in, who came in privily to spy out our liberty which we have in Christ Jesus, nähmen, wichen wir denselbigen nicht eine Stunde untertan zu sein, auf daß die Wahrheit des Evangelii bei uns bestünde.“ Und redet Paulus an demselben Ort von der Beschneidung, welche zu der Zeit ein frei Mittel Ding war, 1 Kor. 7, auch in geistlicher [* christlicher] Freiheit sonst von Paulo gebraucht ward, Act. 16. Da aber die falschen Apostel zur Bestätigung ihrer falschen Lehre (als wären die Werke des Gesetzes zur Gerechtigkeit und Seligkeit vonnöthen) die Beschneidung erforderten und mißbrauchten, da spricht Paulus, daß er nicht eine Stunde habe weichen wollen, auf daß die Wahrheit des Evangelii bestünde.

Also weicht Paulus und gibt den Schwachen nach in Speise und Zeit oder Tagen, Röm. 14. Aber den falschen Aposteln, die solches als nöthige Dinge aufs Gewissen legen wollten, will er auch in solchen an ihm selbst [an sich] freien Mitteldingen nicht weichen. Kol. 2: „Lasset euch niemand Gewissen machen über Speise, Trank oder über bestimmte Feiertage!“ Und da Petrus und Barnabas in solchem Fall etwas nachgaben, strafft sie Paulus öffentlich, als die in dem nicht richtig nach der Wahrheit des Evangelii wandelten, Gal. 2.

Denn hier ist es nicht mehr um die äußerlichen Mitteldinge zu tun, welche ihrer Natur und Wesen nach für sich selbst frei sind und bleiben und demnach kein Gebot oder Verbot leiden mögen, dieselben zu gebrauchen oder zu unterlassen, sondern es ist erstlich zu tun um den hohen Artikel unsers christlichen Glaubens; wie der Apostel zeugt Gal. 2: „auf daß die Wahrheit des Evangelii bestünde“, welche durch solchen Zwang oder Gebot verdunkelt und verkehrt wird, weil solche Mitteldinge alsdann zur Bestätigung falscher Lehre, Aberglaubens und Abgötterei und zur Unterdrückung reiner Lehre und christlicher Freiheit entweder öffentlich erfordert oder doch dazu von den Widersachern mißbraucht und also aufgenommen [verstanden] werden.

Desgleichen ist's auch zu tun um den Artikel der christlichen Freiheit, welchen zu erhalten der Heilige Geist durch den Mund des heiligen Apostels seiner Kirche, wie jetzt gehört, so ernstlich befohlen hat. Denn sobald derselbe geschwächt und Menschengebote mit Zwang der Kirche als nötig aufgedrungen werden, als wäre Unterlassung derselben Unrecht und Sünde, ist der Abgötterei der Weg schon bereitet, dadurch nachmals Menschengebote gehäuft [werden] und für einen Gottesdienst, nicht allein den Geboten Gottes gleichgehalten; sondern auch über dieselben gesetzt werden.

So werden auch durch solch Nachgeben und Vergleichen in äußerlichen Dingen, da man zuvor in der Lehre nicht christlich vereiniget [ist], die Abgöttischen in ihrer Abgötterei gestärkt, dagegen die Rechtgläubigen betrübt, gärrert und in ihrem Glauben geschwächt, welches beides ein jeder Christ bei seiner Seelen Heil und Seligkeit zu meiden schuldig ist; wie geschrieben steht: „Wehe der Welt der Eüergern halben!“ Item: „Wer den Geringsen ärgert deren, die an mich glauben, dem wäre es besser, daß ihm ein Mühlstein an seinem Hals ut nos in servitutem redigerent, iis neque ad horam cessimus subiectione, ut veritas evangelii permaneat apud vos. Manifestum 12] est autem, Paulum ibi agere de circumcissione, quae illis temporibus iam res adiaphora facta erat, 1 Cor. 7, 18 sq., et quam Paulus alias (in libertate tamen Christiana et spiritali) observare aliquoties solebat, Act. 16, 3. Cum autem pseudoapostoli circumcisionem ad stabiliendum falsum suum dogma (quod opera legis ad iustitiam et salutem necessaria essent) urgerent eaque ad confirmandum suum errorem in animis hominum abuterentur, ingenue affirmat Paulus, quod ne ad horam quidem ipsis cesserit, ut veritas evangelii sarta tectaque permaneret.

13] Sic Paulus infirmis in fide cedit observatione discriminis ciborum et temporum seu dierum, Rom. 14, 6. Pseudoapostolis autem, qui haec tamquam necessaria conscientiis imponere volebant, etiam in rebus per se adiaphoris cedere recusant. Et alibi inquit, Col. 2, 16: Nemo vos iudicet in cibo aut in potu aut in parte diei festi etc. Et cum Petrus et Barnabas ea in re Iudaeis plus, quam oportebat, cessissent, in faciem eis restitit, eo quod non recte ambularent ad veritatem evangelii, Gal. 2, 11 sqq.

14] In eo enim rerum statu non iam de externis adiaphoris agitur, quae natura sua per se libera sunt permanentque, unde neque mandanda sunt neque prohibenda, ut vel observentur vel intermittantur. Sed agitur praecipuus religionis nostrae Christianae articulus, ut nimirum veritas evangelii constet, sicut apostolus testatur Gal. 2, 5. [R. 793] Veritas enim evangelii obscuratur et labefactatur, cum adiaphora cum mandato et coactione conscientiis observanda imponuntur, quia ad confirmationem superstitionum, falsae doctrinae et idololatriae et ad opprimendam sinceram doctrinam et libertatem Christianam vel palam ab adversariis requiruntur, vel certe ita ab ipsis recipiuntur et in hunc abusum et pravam finem restituta creduntur.

16] Quin etiam eiusmodi intempestiva cessione in externis illis rebus adiaphoris (ubi nondum de doctrina ipsa pius consensus est factus) idololatriae in sua idolomania confirmantur. Contra vero pia mentes et vere in Christum credentes contristantur, perturbantur, offenduntur et ipsarum fides, quasi ariete quodam, graviter concutitur et quodammodo labefactatur. Huic malo ne occasionem praebeamus, summo studio (si modo aeterna salus nobis cordi est) cavere debemus. Sic enim that they might bring us into bondage; to whom we gave place by subjection, no, not for an hour, that the truth of the Gospel might continue with you. [Now it is manifest that in that place Paul speaks concerning circumcision, which at that time had become an adiaphoron (1 Cor. 7, 18 f.), and which at other occasions was observed by Paul (however, with Christian and spiritual freedom, Acts 16, 3). But when the false apostles urged circumcision for establishing their false doctrine, (that the works of the Law were necessary for righteousness and salvation,) and misused it for confirming their error in the minds of men, Paul says that he would not yield even for an hour, in order that the truth of the Gospel might continue unimpaired.]

Thus Paul yields and gives way to the weak as to food and [the observance of] times or days, Rom. 14, 6. But to the false apostles, who wished to impose these upon the conscience as necessary things, he will yield not even in such things as in themselves are adiaphora, Col. 2, 16: Let no man therefore judge you in meat, or in drink, or in respect of an holy day. And when Peter and Barnabas yielded somewhat [more than they ought] in such an emergency, Paul openly reproves them as those who in this matter were not walking aright, according to the truth of the Gospel, Gal. 2, 11 ff.

For here it is no longer a question concerning external matters of indifference, which in their nature and essence are and remain of themselves free, and accordingly can admit of no command or prohibition that they be employed or omitted; but it is a question, in the first place, concerning the eminent article of our Christian faith, as the apostle testifies, that the truth of the Gospel might continue, which is obscured and perverted by such compulsion or command, because such adiaphora are then either publicly required for the sanction of false doctrine, superstition, and idolatry, and for the suppression of pure doctrine and Christian liberty, or at least are abused for this purpose by the adversaries, and are thus viewed [and are believed to be restored for this abuse and wicked end].

Likewise, the article concerning Christian liberty also is here at stake, which the Holy Ghost through the mouth of the holy apostle so earnestly charged His Church to preserve, as we have just heard. For as soon as this is weakened and the ordinances of men [human traditions] are forced upon the Church with coercion, as though it were wrong and a sin to omit them, the way is already prepared for idolatry, and by this means ordinances of men [human traditions] are afterwards multiplied and regarded as a divine worship, not only equal to the ordinances of God, but are even placed above them.

Moreover, by such [untimely] yielding and conformity in external things, where there has not been previously Christian union in doctrine, idolaters are confirmed in their idolatry; on the other hand, the true believers are grieved, offended, and weakened in their faith [their faith is grievously shaken, and made to totter as though by a battering-ram]; both of which every Christian for the sake of his soul's welfare and salvation is bound to avoid, as it is written: Woe unto the world because of offenses! Also: Whoso shall offend hinge, und er ersäufet würde im Meer, da es am tiefsten ist“, Matth. 18.

Sonderlich aber ist zu bedenken, daß Christus sagt: „Wer mich bekennet vor den Menschen, den will ich auch bekennen vor meinem himmlischen Vater“, Matth. 10.

Daß aber solches je und allwege der vornehmsten Lehrer der Augsbургischen Konfession Glaube und Bekenntnis von solchen Mitteldingen gewesen, in deren Fußtapfen wir getreten, und durch Gottes Gnade bei solchem ihrem Bekenntnis gedanken zu verhärten, weißen nachfolgende Zeugnisse aus, so aus den Schmalkaldischen Artikeln gezogen, welche Anno 37 usw. gestellt und unterschrieben worden.

Aus den Schmalkaldischen Artikeln.

Anno 1537 usw.

Die Schmalkaldischen Artikel (Von der Kirche) sagen hiervon also: „Wir gestehen ihnen“ (den päpstlichen Bischöfen) „nicht, daß sie die Kirche seien, und [sie] sind es auch nicht, und [wir] wollen es auch nicht hören, was sie uns unter dem Namen der Kirche gebieten und verbieten. Denn es weiß, Gott Lob, ein Kind von sieben Jahren, was die Kirche sei, nämlich die Heiligen, Gläubigen und die Schäflein, die ihres Hirten Stimme hören.“ Und kurz zuvor (Von der Weihe und Volation): „Wenn die Bischöfe rechte Bischöfe wollten sein und sich der Kirche und des Evangelii annehmen, so möchte man ihnen das um der Liebe und Einigkeit willen (doch nicht aus Not) lassen gegeben sein, daß sie uns und unsere Prediger ordinierten und konfirmierten, doch hintangesetzt alle Farben und Gespenst unchristlichen Wesens oder Gepräges. Nun sie aber nicht rechte Bischöfe sind oder auch nicht sein wollen, sondern weltliche Herren und Fürsten, die weder predigen noch lehren noch taufen noch kommunizieren noch einiges Werk oder Amt der Kirche treiben wollen, dazu diejenigen, die zu solchem Amt berufen, vertreiben, verfolgen und verdammen, so muß dennoch die Kirche um ihretwillen nicht ohne Diener bleiben.“

Und unter dem Artikel von des Papsts Primat oder Herrschaft sagen die Schmalkaldischen Artikel also: „Darum, sowenig wir den Teufel selbst für einen Herrn oder Gott anbeten können, so wenig können wir auch seinen Apostel, den Papst oder Antichrist, in seinem Regiment zum Haupt oder Herrn leiden; denn Lügen und Mord, Leib und Seele zu verderben ewiglich, das ist sein päpstlich Regiment eigentlich.“

Und in der Schrift von der Gewalt und Obrigkeit des Papsts, welche den Schmalkaldischen Artikeln angehängt und von den damals anwesenden Theologen auch mit eigenen Händen unterschrieben [ist], stehen diese Worte: „Niemand soll die Kirche Christus dicit Matth. 18, 6 sq.: Vae mundo a scandalis! Et ibidem: Qui scandalizaverit unum de pusillis istis, qui in me credunt, expeditur ei, ut suspenderetur mola asinaria in collo eius, et demergeretur in profundum maris.

17] Imprimis vero hoc Christi dictum [R. 794 alta mente est reponendum Matth. 10, 32: Qui me confessus fuerit coram hominibus, eum etiam ego confitebor coram Patre meo coelesti.

18] Et sane, quod haec semper fuerit clarissimorum Augustanae Confessionis theologorum fides et confessio de rebus adiaphoris (quam et nos ipsorum vestigiis insistentes, profiteamur, et in ea constanter per Dei gratiam permanere cupimus), id liquidissime testimonia, quae recitabimus, demonstrabunt: ea in Smalcaldicis Articulis anno etc. XXXVII consignata et a praecipuis theologis subscriptione confirmata sunt.

Testimonia e Smalcaldicis Articulis, anno Domini MDXXXVII conscriptis, deprompta.

19] Articuli Smalcaldici (De ecclesia) de hoc negotio sic loquuntur: Nequaquam hoc episcopis (pontificis) concedimus, quod ipsi sint ecclesia, quia non sunt ecclesia. Neque ea audiemus, quae illi nobis sub ecclesiae nomine vel mandaverint vel prohibuerint. Nam (Dei beneficio) puer septennis iam novit, quae sit vera ecclesia: sancti videlicet, credentes et oviculae, quae pastoris sui vocem audiunt. Et paulo ante (De ordinatione et vocatione): Si episcopi recte officio episcopali fungi et ecclesiae regendae atque evangelii propagandi curam serio suscipere vellent, hoc illis ratione caritatis et propter bonum pacis (non tamen ex quadam necessitate) concedi posset, ut nos et ecclesiae nostrae ministros ordinarent atque in functione ecclesiastica confirmarent, remotis tamen omnibus larvatis ineptis et impiis nugis atque magicis pompis. Cum autem neque veri sint aut esse velint episcopi, sed potius huius mundi principes ac domini, qui neque concionantur neque docent neque baptizant neque Coenam [R. 795 Domini] administrant neque ullum opus ecclesiasticum facere aut munus tale obire velint, quin potius eos, qui ad ministerium evangelii vocati sunt, in exilium eiciunt, persequuntur atque anathemate feriunt: profecto ecclesia Dei in ipsorum gratiam connivere non potest, ut interea idoneis ministris destituatur.

21] Et in scripto de potestate et iurisdictione papae, quod Smalcaldicis Articulis annexum et a theologis, qui tum Smalcaldiae erant, subscriptione confirmatum est, haec leguntur: Nemo ecclesiam Dei gravet propriis one of these little ones which believe in Me, it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea [Matt. 18, 6, 7].

But it is to be especially remembered what Christ says: Whosoever therefore shall confess Me before men, him will I confess also before My Father which is in heaven, Matt. 10, 32.

However, that this has always and everywhere been the faith and confession, concerning such indifferent matters, of the chief teachers of the Augsburg Confession, into whose footsteps we have entered, and in whose Confession we intend by God's grace to persevere, is shown [most clearly] by the following testimonies drawn from the Smalcald Articles, which were composed and subscribed in the year 1537:

From the Smalcald Articles, in the Year 1537, etc.

The Smalcald Articles (Of the Church) say concerning this as follows: We do not concede to them (the papal bishops) that they are the Church, and indeed they are not; nor will we listen to those things which, under the name of Church, they enjoin and forbid. For, thank God, [to-day] a child seven years old knows what the Church is, namely, the saints, believers, and lambs, who hear the voice of their Shepherd. And shortly before (Of Ordination and Vocation): If the bishops would be true bishops, and would devote themselves to the Church and the Gospel, it might be granted to them, for the sake of love and unity, but not from necessity, to ordain and confirm us and our preachers; omitting, however, all comedies and spectacular doings of an unchristian nature and display. But, because they neither are, nor wish to be, true bishops, but worldly lords and princes, who will neither preach, nor teach, nor baptize, nor administer the Lord's Supper, nor perform any work or office of the Church, and, moreover, persecute and condemn those who, having been called to do so, discharge these functions, the Church ought not on their account to remain without ministers.

And in the article Of the Papacy, the Smalcald Articles say (p. 475): Therefore, just as little as we can worship the devil himself as Lord and God, we can endure his apostle, the Pope, or Antichrist, in his rule as head or lord. For to lie and to kill and to destroy body and soul eternally, that is wherein his papal government really consists.

And in the treatise Concerning the Power and Primacy of the Pope, which is appended to the Smalcald Articles, and was also subscribed by the theologians then present with their own hands, are these words: No one is beschweren mit eigenen Sagen, sondern hie soll es also heißen, daß keines Gewalt noch Ansehen mehr gelte denn das Wort Gottes."

Und bald danach: „Weil nun dem also ist, sollen alle Christen auf das fleißigste sich hüten, daß sie solcher gottlosen Lehre, Gotteslästerung und unbilliger Täuerei [Wüterei] sich nicht theilhaftig machen, sondern sollen vom Papst und seinen Gliedern oder Anhang als von des Antichrists Reich weichen und es verfluchen, wie Christus befohlen hat: „Hütet euch vor den falschen Propheten"; und Paulus gebet, daß man falsche Prediger meiden und als einen Greuel verfluchen soll. Und 2 Kor. 6 spricht er: „Zieheth nicht am fremden Joch mit den Ungläubigen; denn was hat das Licht für Gemeinschaft mit der Finsternis?"

„Schwer ist es, daß man von so viel Lanten und Leuten sich trennen und eine [be]sondere Lehre führen will; aber hie steht Gottes Befehl, daß jedermann sich soll hüten und nicht mit denen einhellig sein, so unrechte Lehre führen oder mit Wüterei zu erhalten gedenken."

So hat auch D. Luther in einem sonderlichen Bedenken, was man von den Ceremonien insgemein und insonderheit von Mitteldingen halten soll, tom. 3 Ien., fol. 523, ausführlich die Kirche Gottes erinnert, inmaßen auch Anno 30 usw. gesehen, wie in tom. 5 Ien. deutsch zu finden [ist].

Aus welcher Erklärung jedermänniglich verstehen kann, was einer christlichen Gemeinde und jedem Christenmenschen, insonderheit zur Zeit des Bekenntnisses, besonders den Predigern mit unverletztem Gewissen in Mitteldingen zu tun oder zu lassen [gebührt], damit Gott nicht erzürnt, die Liebe nicht verletzt, die Feinde Gottes Wort nicht gestärkt noch die Schwachgläubigen verärgert werden.

1. Demnach verwerfen und verdammen wir als unrecht, wenn Menschengebote für sich selbst als ein Gottesdienst oder Stück desselben gehalten werden.

2. Wir verwerfen und verdammen auch als unrecht, wenn solche Gebote mit Zwang als notwendig der Gemeinde Gottes aufgedrungen werden.

3. Wir verwerfen und verdammen auch als unrecht derer Meinung, so da halten, daß man zur Zeit der Verfolgung den Feinden des heiligen Evangelii (das zum Abbruch der Wahrheit dient) in dergleichen Mitteldingen möge willfahren oder sich mit ihnen vergleichen.

4. Gleichfalls halten wir auch für strafwürdige Sünde, wo zur Zeit der Verfolgung entweder in Mitteldingen oder in der Lehre, und was sonst zur Religion gehört, um der Feinde des Evangelii willen im Werk und mit der Tat dem christlichen Bekenntnis zuwider und entgegen etwas gehandelt wird.

5. Wir verwerfen und verdammen auch, wenn solche Mitteldinge dergestalt abgeschafft werden, als sollte es der Gemeinde Gottes nicht freistehen, jeder Zeit und Orts, derselben Gelegenheit nach, wie es der Kirche am nützlichsten, sich eines oder aliquibus traditionibus. In hoc enim negotio firmum et firmum esse debet, quod nullius hominis potestas vel auctoritas Verbo Dei sit praefenda.

22] Et post aliqua: Quae cum ita se habent, omnes Christiani quam diligentissime sibi caveant, ne impiae illius [pontificiae] doctrinae, blasphemiarum, tyrannidis crudelissimae participes sese faciant, pontificem autem, membra et squamas eius ut regnum ipsissimi antichristi aversentur atque execrentur. Christus enim id praecepit dicens [Matth. 7, 15]: „Cavete a pseudopropheta." Et Paulus praecipit [Tit. 3, 11], ut falsos doctores vitemus et veluti abominationem quandam execremur. „Nolite" (inquit 2 Cor. 6, 14) „iugum ducere cum infidelibus; quae enim participatio iustitiae cum iniquitate? aut quae societas luci ad tenebras" etc.?

24] Sed et D. Lutherus in alio quodam scripto (in quo ad quaestionem de ceremoniis in genere, de adiaphoris vero etiam in specie quid sentiendum sit, docuit) ecclesiam Dei de hoc negotio pie et luculenter erudit. Et exstant quaedam ab ipso anno Domini MDXXX exarata, quae magno cum fructu legi possunt. Tom. 3 Ien., fol. 523. Tom. 5 Ien., Germ.

25] Ex his omnibus perspicue intelligi potest, quid unamquamque ecclesiam, quid singulos Christianos, praesertim temporibus illis, quando confessio fidei edenda est, imprimis ecclesiae ministros in rebus adiaphoris bona et illaesa conscientia facere vel omittere deceat, ne Deus ad iustam indignationem provocetur, caritas violetur, hostes Verbi Dei animosiores reddantur et infirmi in fide offendantur.

26] I. Relicimus igitur et damnamus hos errores: Quando humanae traditiones per se pro Dei cultu aut pro illius aliqua parte habentur.

27] II. Quando humanae traditiones per modum coactionis tamquam necessariae ecclesiae Dei observandae obtruduntur.

28] III. Repudiamus et damnamus etiam eorum opinionem, qui sentiunt, quod persecutionis tempore hostibus evangelii (cum iactura certe veritatis divinae) in adiaphoris restituendis gratificari et cum ipsis ea in parte consentire liceat.

29] IV. Illud etiam crimine non vacare iudicamus, quando persecutionis tempore vel in adiaphoris vel in doctrina vel in aliis rebus ad religionem pertinentibus propter evangelii hostes ipso facto aliquid committitur, quod pie confessioni repugnet.

30] V. Relicimus et damnamus etiam [R. 797] eorum intemperiam, qui adiaphora ea opinione abrogant, quasi ecclesiae Dei non esset liberum, quovis loco aut tempore, pro re nata et ecclesiae utilitate, unum vel plura adiaphora to burden the Church with his own traditions, but here the rule is to be that nobody's power or authority is to avail more than the Word of God.

And shortly afterwards (p. 517): This being the case, all Christians ought most diligently to beware of becoming partakers of the godless doctrine, blasphemies, and unjust cruelties of the Pope; but ought to desert and execrate the Pope with his members, or adherents, as the kingdom of Antichrist, just as Christ has commanded (Matt. 7, 15): "Beware of false prophets." And Paul commands us to avoid false teachers and execrate them as an abomination. And in 2 Cor. 6, 14 he says: "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers; for what communion hath light with darkness?"

It is a grave matter wanting to separate one's self from so many lands and nations, and to profess a separate doctrine; but here stands God's command, that every one should beware and not agree with those who maintain false doctrine, or who think of supporting it by means of cruelty.

So Dr. Luther, too, has amply instructed the Church of God in a special treatise concerning what should be thought of ceremonies in general, and especially of adiaphora, Vol. 3, Jena, p. 523; as was also done in 1530, and can be seen in Tom. 3, Jena, German.

From this explanation every one can understand what every Christian congregation and every Christian man, especially in time of confession [when a confession of faith should be made], and, most of all, preachers, are to do or to leave undone, without injury to conscience, with respect to adiaphora, in order that God may not be angered [provoked to just indignation], love may not be injured, the enemies of God's Word be not strengthened, nor the weak in faith offended.

1. Therefore we reject and condemn as wrong when the ordinances of men in themselves are regarded as a service or part of the service of God.

2. We reject and condemn also as wrong when these ordinances are by coercion forced upon the congregation of God as necessary.

3. We reject and condemn also as wrong the opinion of those who hold (what tends to the detriment of the truth) that at a time of persecution we may comply with the enemies of the holy Gospel in [restoring] such adiaphora, or come to an agreement with them.

4. We likewise regard it as a sin that deserves to be rebuked when in time of persecution anything is done either in indifferent matters or in doctrine, and in what otherwise pertains to religion, for the sake of the enemies of the Gospel, in word and act, contrary and opposed to the Christian confession.

5. We reject and condemn also [the madness] when these adiaphora are abrogated in such a manner as though it were not free to the congregation [church] of God at any time and place to employ one or more in Christian liberty, according to its circumstances, as may be most useful to the Church.

mehr [mehrere] in christlicher Freiheit zu gebrauchen.

Solchergehalt werden die Kirchen von wegen Ungleichheit der Ceremonien, da in christlicher Freiheit nicht weniger oder mehr derselben hat, einander nicht verdammen, wenn sie sonst in der Lehre und allen derselben Artikeln, auch rechtem Gebrauch der heiligen Sacramente miteinander einig [sind], nach dem wohlbekannten Spruch: Dissonantia ieiunii non dissolvit consonantiam fidei, „Ungleichheit des Fastens soll die Einigkeit des Glaubens nicht trennen“.

XI.

Von der ewigen Vorsehung [Vorsehung] und Wahl Gottes.

Wiewohl unter den Theologen Augsbургischer Konfession noch gänzlich keine öffentliche, ärgerliche und weitläufige Zwiespaltung von der ewigen Wahl der Kinder Gottes vorgefallen [ist], jedoch, nachdem dieser Artikel an andern Orten in ganz beschwerlichen Streit gezogen und auch unter den Unsern etwas davon erregt worden [ist], dazu von den Theologen nicht allwege gleiche Neben geführt [sind], derhalben, vermittelt göttlicher Gnade auch künstlich bei unsern Nachkommen, soviel an uns, Uneinigkeit und Trennung in solchem vorzukommen [vorzubeugen], haben wir desselben Erklärung auch hierher setzen wollen, auf daß männiglich [jedermann] wissen möge, was auch von diesem Artikel unsere einhellige Lehre, Glaube und Bekenntnis sei. Denn die Lehre von diesem Artikel, wenn sie aus und nach dem Vorbilde des göttlichen Wortes geführt [wird], man nicht kann noch soll für unnütz oder unnötig, viel weniger für ärgerlich oder schädlich halten, weil die Heilige Schrift des Artikels nicht an einem Ort allein etwa ungefähr gedenkt, sondern an vielen Orten denselben gründlich handelt und treibt. So muß man auch um Mißbrauchs oder Mißverständes willen die Lehre des göttlichen Wortes nicht unterlassen oder verwerfen, sondern eben derhalben, allen Mißbrauch und Mißverstand abzuwenden, soll und muß der rechte Verstand aus Grund der Schrift erklärt werden. Und steht demnach die einfältige Summa und Inhalt der Lehre von diesem Artikel auf nachfolgenden Punkten:

Erstlich ist der Unterschied zwischen der ewigen Vorsehung Gottes und [der] ewigen Wahl seiner Kinder zu der ewigen Seligkeit mit Fleiß zu merken. Denn praescientia vel praevisio (das ist, daß Gott alles vorher sieht und weiß, ehe es geschieht, welches man die Vorsehung Gottes nennt) geht über alle Kreaturen, gute und böse, daß er nämlich alles zuvor sieht und weiß, was da ist oder sein wird, was da geschieht oder geschehen wird, es sei gut oder böse, weil vor Gott alle Dinge, sie seien vergangen oder zukünftig, unverborgen und gegenwärtig sind. Wie geschrieben steht Matth. 10: „Kauft man nicht zweien Sperlinge um einen Pfennig? Noch fällt derselben keiner auf die Erde ohne euren Vater.“ Und Ps. 139: „Deine Augen sahen mich, da ich noch unbereitet war, und waren alle Tage auf dein Buch geschrieben, die noch werden sollten, und der-

XI.

DE AETERNA PRAEDESTINATIONE ET ELECTIONE DEI.

1] De aeterna electione filiorum Dei inter Augustanae Confessionis theologos nulla hactenus aperta et cum scandalo coniuncta lateque sparsa controversia exorta est. Quia vero apud exteros de eo articulo vehementer disceptatum est, et inter nostros etiam homines aliqui gliscere coepit, et theologi non semper similes de hoc negotio sermones usurpant, studebimus, per gratiam Dei in eo elaborare, ut, quantum quidem in nobis erit, omnes dissensiones et schismata apud posteritatem nostram praecaveantur. Itaque illius articuli declarationem huic scripto inserere placuit, ut omnibus manifestum fiat, quae etiam [R. 708 de hoc articulo nostra fides, doctrina et con- 2] fessio sit. Neque enim sentiendum est, doctrinam de hoc articulo (si tamen iuxta praescriptum et analogiam Verbi Dei et fidei proponatur) vel inutilem vel non necessariam esse; multo autem minus existimandum est, quod offensionis plena sit et detrimentum aliquod piis mentibus afferat. Scriptura enim sacra huius articuli non semel tantum et obiter mentionem facit, sed multis locis eun- 3] dem satis copiose tractat et explicat. Neque vero propter abusum aut sinistras aliquorum opiniones doctrina Verbi coelestis negligenda est aut reiicienda, quin potius eam ipsam ob causam, ut abusus et pravae opiniones tollantur, vera de hoc negotio sententia ex sacrarum litterarum fundamentis proferenda atque proponenda est. Summa autem doctrinae coelestis de hoc articulo his capitibus, quae recensibimus, comprehenditur.

4] Initio discrimen inter aeternam praescientiam et inter electionem aeternam filiorum Dei ad aeternam salutem accurate observandum est. Praescientia enim vel praevisio Dei, qua ille omnia, antequam fiant, praevidet et praescit, ad omnes creaturas, tam malas quam bonas, extenditur. Hac enim vel praevisione vel praescientia Dominus ante novit videtque, quidquid est vel aliquando futurum est, quidquid iam fit, vel quod aliquando continget, sive id bonum sit sive malum, quia Deum neque praeterita neque futura latent, sed omnia ipsi sunt manifesta et praesentia. Sic enim scriptum est Matth. 10, 29: Nonne duo passeresset assere veniunt? Et unus ex illis non cadet super terram sine Patre vestro. Et Psaltes canit Ps. 139, 16: Imperfectum meum viderunt oculi tui, et in libro tuo omnes scripti

Thus [According to this doctrine] the churches will not condemn one another because of dissimilarity of ceremonies when, in Christian liberty, one has less or more of them, provided they are otherwise agreed with one another in the doctrine and all its articles, also in the right use of the holy Sacraments, according to the well-known saying: Dissonantia ieiunii non dissolvit consonantiam fidei; "Disagreement in fasting does not destroy agreement in the faith."

And one of them shall not fall on the ground without your Father. And Ps. 139, 16: Thine eyes did see my substance, yet being imperfect; and in Thy book all my members were written, which in continuance were fashioned, when as

XI.

OF GOD'S ETERNAL FOREKNOWLEDGE [PREDESTINATION] AND ELECTION.

Although among the theologians of the Augsburg Confession there has not occurred as yet any public dissension whatever concerning the eternal election of the children of God that has caused offense, and has become wide-spread, yet since this article has been brought into very painful controversy in other places, and even among our theologians there has been some agitation concerning it; moreover, since the same expressions were not always employed concerning it by the theologians; therefore, in order, by the aid of divine grace, to prevent disagreement and separation on its account in the future among our successors, we, as much as in us lies, have desired also to present an explanation of the same here, so that every one may know what is our unanimous doctrine, faith, and confession also concerning this article. For the doctrine concerning this article, if taught from, and according to, the pattern of the divine Word [and analogy of God's Word and of faith], neither can nor should be regarded as useless or unnecessary, much less as offensive or injurious, because the Holy Scriptures not only in but one place and incidentally, but in many places, thoroughly treat and urge [explain] the same. Moreover, we should not neglect or reject the doctrine of the divine Word on account of abuse or misunderstanding, but precisely on that account, in order to avert all abuse and misunderstanding, the true meaning should and must be explained from the foundation of the Scriptures; and the plain sum and substance [of the heavenly doctrine] concerning this article, accordingly, consists in the following points:

First, the distinction between the eternal foreknowledge of God and the eternal election of His children to eternal salvation, is carefully to be observed. For praescientia vel praevisio (foreknowledge or prevision), that is, that God sees and knows everything before it happens, which is called God's foreknowledge [prescience], extends over all creatures, good and bad; namely, that He foresees and foreknows everything that is or will be, that is occurring or will occur, whether it be good or bad, since before God all things, whether they be past or future, are manifest and present. Thus it is written, Matt. 10, 29: Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing?

selben keiner da war.“ Item Jes. 37: „Ich kenne deinen Auszug und Einzug und dein Toben wider mich.“

Die ewige Wahl Gottes aber vel praedestinatio, das ist, Gottes Verordnung zur Seligkeit, geht nicht zumal über die Frommen und Bösen, sondern allein über die Kinder Gottes, die zum ewigen Leben erwählt und verordnet sind, ehe der Welt Grund gelegt ward; wie Paulus spricht Eph. 1: „Er hat uns erwählt in Christo Jesu und verordnet zur Kinderschaft.“

Die Vorsehung Gottes (praescientia) sieht und weiß zuvor auch das Böse, aber nicht also, daß es Gottes gnädiger Wille wäre, daß es geschehen sollte; sondern was der verkehrte, böse Wille des Teufels und der Menschen vornehmen und tun werde und wolle, das sieht und weiß Gott alles zuvor und hält seine praescientia, das ist, Vorsehung, auch in den bösen Händeln oder Werken ihre Ordnung, daß von Gott dem Bösen, welches Gott nicht will, sein Ziel und Maß gesetzt wird, wie fern es gehen und wie lang es währen solle, wann und wie er's hindern und strafen wolle; welches doch alles Gott der Herr also regiert, daß es zu seines göttlichen Namens Ehre und seiner Auserwählten Heil gereichen [muß], und die Gottlosen darob zu schanden werden müssen.

Der Anfang aber und Ursache des Bösen ist nicht Gottes Vorsehung (denn Gott schafft und wirkt das Böse nicht, hilft und befördert's auch nicht), sondern des Teufels und der Menschen böser, verkehrter Wille; wie geschrieben steht Hof. 13: „Israel, du bringest dich in Unglück; aber dein Heil steht allein bei mir.“ Item: „Du bist nicht ein Gott, dem gottlos Wesen gefalle“, Ps. 5.

Die ewige Wahl Gottes aber sieht und weiß nicht allein zuvor der Auserwählten Seligkeit, sondern ist auch aus gnädigem Willen und Wohlgefallen Gottes in Christo Jesu eine Ursache, so da unsere Seligkeit, und was zu derselben gehört, schafft, wirkt, hilft und befördert; darauf auch unsere Seligkeit also gegründet ist, daß „die Pfoten der Hölle nichts dawider vermögen sollen“; wie geschrieben steht: „Meine Schafe wird mir niemand aus meiner Hand reißen.“ Und abermals: „Und es wurden gläubig, so viele ihrer zum ewigen Leben verordnet waren.“ Matth. 16; Joh. 10; Act. 13.

Dieselbe ewige Wahl oder Verordnung Gottes zum ewigen Leben ist auch nicht also bloß in dem heimlichen, unerforschlichen Rat Gottes zu betrachten, als hielte solche nicht mehr in sich oder gehörte nicht mehr dazu, wäre auch nicht mehr dabei zu bedenken, denn daß Gott zuvor ersehen [habe], welche und wie viele selig, welche und wie viele verdammt sollten werden, oder daß er allein solche Musterung gehalten: Dieser soll selig, jener soll verdammt werden; dieser soll beständig bleiben, jener soll nicht beständig bleiben.

Denn daraus nehmen und fassen ihrer viele selbstsüchtige, gefährliche und schädliche Gedanken, entweder Sicherheit und Unbußfertigkeit oder Klein-erant dies, qui futuri erant, antequam essent. Et Esaias ait Es. 37, 28: Habitationem tuam et egressum tuum et introitum tuum cognovi et insaniam tuam contra me.

5) Aeterna vero electio seu praedestinatio Dei ad salutem non simul ad bonos et [R. 799] ad malos pertinet, sed tantum ad filios Dei, qui ad aeternam vitam consequendam electi et ordinati sunt, priusquam mundi fundamenta iacerentur, ut apostolus testatur iniquiens Eph. 1, 5: Praedestinavit nos in adoptionem filiorum per Iesum Christum in ipsum.

6) Praescientia Dei praevidet et novit etiam mala, antequam fiant, sed non ea ratione, quasi Dei voluntas propitia illa sit, ut fiant. Sed ea, quae perversa diaboli et hominum voluntas molitur et efficere conatur atque etiam effectura est, haec Deus omnia longe ante praevidet et novit. Et ipsius praescientia etiam in malis rebus et operibus ordinem suum ita servat, ut a Domino rebus malis (quas Deus nec vult nec approbat) certae metae ponantur atque circumscribantur, quas egredi nequeant, et iisdem praescribitur, quam diu durare debeant, et quando et quomodo ea mala impediri rursus et puniri debeant. Et haec omnia Dominus ita gubernat, ut ad nominis sui divini gloriam et ad electorum suorum salutem cedant, impii vero confundantur et pudesant.

7) Principium autem et causa mali non est ipsa Dei praescientia (Deus enim non creat, procurat, efficit aut operatur malum, sed neque illud iuvat aut promovet), at diaboli et hominum prava et perversa voluntas causa est mali. Sic enim scriptum est Os. 13, 9: Perditio tua ex te est, Israel; tantummodo in me salus tibi. Et David inquit Ps. 5, 5: Non Deus volens iniquitatem tu es.

8) Aeterna vero electio Dei non tantum praevidet et praescit electorum salutem, sed ex clementissima Dei voluntate et beneplacito in Christo Iesu causa est, quae nostram salutem, et quae ad eam pertinent, procurat, efficit, iuvat, promovet. Et quidem in ea divina praedestinatione aeterna nostra salus ita fundata est, ut etiam inferorum portae adversus eam praevalere nequeant, Matth. 16, 18. Scriptum est enim Ioh. 10, 28: Oves meas nemo [R. 800] rapiet de manu mea. Et alibi, Act. 13, 48: Crediderunt, quotquot ad vitam aeternam erant ordinati.

9) Et haec sane aeterna electio seu ordinatio Dei ad vitam aeternam non nuda in arcano illo coelesti et imperscrutabili Dei consilio consideranda est, quasi ea nihil praeterea complectatur, aut ad eam requiratur, aut in ea meditanda expendendum sit nisi hoc, quod Deus praeviderit, quinam et quot homines salutem sint consecuturi, et qui atque quam multi in aeternum sint perituri, aut quasi Dominus militarem quandam delectum instituerit atque dixerit aut statuerit: Hic salvandus est, ille vero dammandus; hic ad finem usque in fide constans perseverabit, ille vero non perseveraturus est.

10) Ex opinione enim hac multi absurdas, periculosas et perniciosas cogitationes hauriunt, quae aut securitatem et impenitentiam yet there were none of them. Also Is. 37, 28: I know thy abode, and thy going out, and thy coming in, and thy rage against Me.

The eternal election of God, however, vel praedestinationis (or predestination), that is, God's ordination to salvation, does not extend at once over the godly and the wicked, but only over the children of God, who were elected and ordained to eternal life before the foundation of the world was laid, as Paul says, Eph. 1, 4, 5: He hath chosen us in Him, having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ.

The foreknowledge of God (praescientia) foresees and foreknows also that which is evil; however, not in such a manner as though it were God's gracious will that it should happen; but all that the perverse, wicked will of the devil and of men wills and desires to undertake and do, God sees and knows before; and His praescientia, that is, foreknowledge, observes its order also in wicked acts or works, inasmuch as a limit and measure is fixed by God to the evil which God does not will, how far it should go, and how long it should last, when and how He will hinder and punish it; for all of this God the Lord so overrules that it must redound to the glory of the divine name and to the salvation of His elect, and the godless, on that account, must be put to confusion.

However, the beginning and cause of evil is not God's foreknowledge (for God does not create and effect [or work] evil, neither does He help or promote it); but the wicked, perverse will of the devil and of men [is the cause of evil], as it is written Hos. 13, 9: O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself; but in Me is thy help. Also: Thou art not a God that hath pleasure in wickedness. Ps. 5, 4.

The eternal election of God, however, not only foresees and foreknows the salvation of the elect, but is also, from the gracious will and pleasure of God in Christ Jesus, a cause which procures, works, helps, and promotes our salvation and what pertains thereto; and upon this [divine predestination] our salvation is so founded that the gates of hell cannot prevail against it, Matt. 16, 18, as is written John 10, 28: Neither shall any man pluck My sheep out of My hand. And again, Acts 13, 48: And as many as were ordained to eternal life, believed.

Nor is this eternal election or ordination of God to eternal life to be considered in God's secret, inscrutable counsel in such a bare manner as though it comprised nothing further, or as though nothing more belonged to it, and nothing more were to be considered in it, than that God foresaw who and how many were to be saved, who and how many were to be damned, or that He only held a [sort of military] muster, thus: "This one shall be saved, that one shall be damned; this one shall remain steadfast [in faith to the end], that one shall not remain steadfast."

For from this [notion] many derive and conceive strange, dangerous, and pernicious thoughts, which occasion and strengthen either security and impenitence or despondency and mühtigkeit und Verzweiflung daher zu verursachen und zu stärken, daß sie in beschwerliche Gedanken fallen und reden: Weil Gott seine Auserwählten zur Seligkeit vorsehen [vorsehen] hat, ehe der Welt Grund gelegt ward, Eph. 1, und Gottes Vorsehen nicht fehlen noch von jemand gehindert oder geändert werden kann, Jes. 14; Röm. 9: bin ich denn zur Seligkeit vorsehen, so kann mir's daran nicht schaden, ob ich gleich ohne Buße allerlei Sünde und Schande treibe, Wort und Sakrament nicht achte, weder mit Buße, Glauben, Gebet oder Gottseligkeit mich bestimme, sondern ich werde und muß doch selig werden, denn Gottes Vorsehung muß geschehen; bin ich aber nicht vorsehen, so hilft es doch nicht, wenn ich mich gleich zum Worte hielte, Buße täte, glaubte ufm., denn Gottes Vorsehung kann ich nicht hindern oder ändern.

Und solche Gedanken fallen auch wohl gottseligen Herzen ein, wenn sie gleich aus Gottes Gnade Buße, Glauben und guten Vorsatz haben daß sie bedenken: Wenn du aber nicht von Ewigkeit zur Seligkeit vorsehen bist, so ist's doch alles umsonst, und sonderlich wenn sie auf ihre Schwachheit sehen und auf die Exempel derer, so nicht verharret, sondern wieder abgefallen sind.

haec tum praecipue homini pio in mentem veniunt, cum suas infirmitates considerant, et in eorum exempla animi oculos defixos habet, qui non in fide ad finem usque perseverarunt, sed a vera pietate in impietatem rursus prolapsi et apostatae facti sunt.

Wider diesen falschen Wahn und Gedanken soll man nachfolgenden klaren Grund, der gewiß ist und nicht fehlen kann, setzen, nämlich: Weil alle Schrift, von Gott eingegeben, nicht zur Sicherheit und Unbußfertigkeit, sondern zur Strafe, Züchtigung und Besserung dienen soll, 2 Tim. 3; item, weil alles in Gottes Wort darum uns vorgeschrieben ist, nicht daß wir dadurch in Verzweiflung getrieben sollen werden, sondern daß wir durch Geduld und Trost der Schrift Hoffnung haben, Röm. 15: so ist ohne allen Zweifel in keinem Wege das der gesunde Verstand oder rechte Gebrauch der Lehre von der ewigen Vorsehung Gottes, daß dadurch entweder Unbußfertigkeit oder Verzweiflung verursacht oder gestärkt werden. So führt auch die Schrift diese Lehre nicht anders denn also, daß sie uns dadurch zum Wort weist, Eph. 1; 1 Kor. 1, zur Buße vermahnt, 2 Tim. 3, zur Gottseligkeit anhält, Eph. 1: Joh. 15, den Glauben stärkt und unserer Seligkeit uns verweist, Eph. 1; Joh. 10; 2 Thess. 2.

tur, ad pie vivendum invitet, fidem nostram reddat. Eph. 1, 13; 1 Cor. 1, 7; 2 Tim. 3, 16; Ioh. 5, 39; 15, 3; 10, 27 sq.; 2 Thess. 2, 13 sq.

Derwegen, wenn man von der ewigen Wahl oder von der Prädestination und Verordnung der Kinder Gottes zum ewigen Leben recht und mit Frucht denken oder reden will, soll man sich gewöhnen, daß man nicht von der bloßen, heimlichen, verborgenen, unausforschlichen Vorsehung Gottes (speculiere, sondern [betrachte,] wie der Rat, Vorsatz und Verordnung Gottes in Christo Jesu, der das rechte, wahre Buch des Lebens ist, durch das Wort uns geoffenbart wird, nämlich, daß die ganze Lehre von dem Vorsatz, Rat, Willen und Verordnung Gottes, belangend unsere Erlösung, Ver-aut angustias et desperationem in mentibus hominum gignunt et confirmant. Sic enim quidam periculose secum cogitant, quin etiam interdum in hanc sententiam loquuntur: Deus (inquiunt) electos suos ad vitam aeternam praedestinavit, antequam mundi fundamenta iacerentur, Eph. 1, 4. Electio autem Dei errare non potest, neque eam quisquam impedire aut mutare valet, Es. 14, 27; Rom. 9, 19. Ergo si ad vitam aeternam sum electus, nihil salutis meae decedet, etiamsi absque omni poenitentia omnis generis scelera atque flagitia designa-vero, Verbum et sacramenta contempsero, neque unquam de poenitentia, fide, precibus aut pietate cogitavero. Necessario enim salvabor, quia electionem Dei fieri necessario oportet. Sin vero praedestinatus non fuero, nihil prorsus mihi profuerit, etiamsi Verbum Dei meditatus fuero, poenitentiam egero, in Christum credidero etc., quia praedestinationem Dei neque impedire neque mutare potero.

11] Neque vero tantum homines impii, verum etiam pii quandoque in has [R. 801] cogitationes veniunt et incidunt, ut, si maxime per Dei gratiam poenitentiam agant, in Christum credant et pie vivendi laudabile institutum habeant, nihilominus ita secum rem reputent: Quid? si non ab aeterno ad salutem electus seu praedestinatus es, omnis tuus conatus totusque labor tuus irritus erit. Et

12] Contra hanc falsam opinionem et periculosas cogitationes huic solidissimo fundamento, quod expectationem nostram fallere non potest, sed longe firmissimum est, inniti oportet, nempe: Certum est, omnem Scripturam dirinitus inspiratam non ad alendam securitatem aut impenitentiam, sed ad arguendum, ad erudiendum in iustitia et ad vitae emendationem propositam esse, 2 Tim. 3, 16. Certum est etiam, quod omnia, quae in Scriptura Sacra nobis proponuntur, non ideo revelata sint, ut ad desperationem adigamur, sed ut per patientiam et consolationem Scripturae spem habeamus, Rom. 15, 4. Quare haec nequaquam erit vera et sana sententia aut legitimus usus doctrinae de aeterna praedestinatione Dei, quibus vel impenitentia vel desperatio in hominum mentibus excitatur aut confirmatur. Neque vero nobis Scriptura hanc doctrinam aliter quam hoc modo proponit, ut nos ad Verbum Dei revelatum, fide amplectendum, ablegat, ad poenitentiam agendam hortetur, ad pie vivendum invitet, fidem nostram reddat. Eph. 1, 13; 1 Cor. 1, 7; 2 Tim. 3, 16; Ioh. 5, 39; 15, 3; 10, 27 sq.; 2 Thess. 2, 13 sq.

13] Quare cum de aeterna electione seu praedestinatione et ordinatione filiorum Dei ad vitam aeternam recte et cum fructu cogitare aut loqui volumus, assuefaciamus [R. 802] nos, ne nudam, occultam, nulli homini exploratam et cognitam Dei praescientiam ratione nostra perscrutari conemur. Sed ad eum modum divinam electionem meditemur, quemadmodum Dei consilium, propositum et ordinatio in Christo Iesu (qui est verus ille liber vitae) per Verbum nobis revelatur. Totam 14] igitur doctrinam de proposito, consilio, despair, so that they fall into troublesome thoughts and [for thus some think, with peril to themselves, nay, even sometimes] say: Since, before the foundation of the world was laid, Eph. 1, 4, God has foreknown [predestinated] His elect to salvation, and God's foreknowledge [election] cannot fail nor be hindered or changed by any one, Is. 14, 27; Rom. 9, 19, therefore, if I am foreknown [elected] to salvation, nothing can injure me with respect to it, even though I practise all sorts of sin and shame without repentance, have no regard for the Word and Sacraments, concern myself neither with repentance, faith, prayer, nor godliness; but I shall and must be saved nevertheless, because God's foreknowledge [election] must come to pass. If, however, I am not foreknown [predestinated], it helps me nothing anyway, even though I would occupy myself with the Word, repent, believe, etc.; for I cannot hinder or change God's foreknowledge [predestination].

And indeed also to godly hearts, even when, by God's grace they have repentance, faith, and a good purpose [of living in a godly manner], such thoughts occur as these: If you are not foreknown [predestinated or elected] from eternity to salvation, everything [your every effort and entire labor] is of no avail. This occurs especially when they view their weakness and the examples of those who have not persevered [in faith to the end], but have fallen away again [from true godliness to ungodliness, and have become apostates].

To this false delusion and [dangerous] thought we should oppose the following clear argument, which is sure and cannot fail, namely: Since all Scripture, given by inspiration of God, is to serve, not for [cherishing] security and impenitence, but for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness, 2 Tim. 3, 16; also, since everything in God's Word has been prescribed to us, not that we should thereby be driven to despair, but that we, through patience and comfort of the Scriptures, might have hope, Rom. 15, 4, therefore it is without any doubt in no way the sound sense or right use of the doctrine concerning the eternal foreknowledge of God that either impenitence or despair should be occasioned or strengthened thereby. Accordingly, the Scriptures teach this doctrine in no other way than to direct us thereby to the [revealed] Word, Eph. 1, 13; 1 Cor. 1, 7; exhort to repentance, 2 Tim. 3, 16; urge to godliness, Eph. 1, 14; John 15, 3; strengthen faith and assure us of our salvation, Eph. 1, 13; John 10, 27 f.; 2 Thess. 2, 13 f.

Therefore, if we wish to think or speak correctly and profitably concerning eternal election, or the predestination and ordination of the children of God to eternal life, we should accustom ourselves not to speculate concerning the bare, secret, concealed, inscrutable foreknowledge of God, but how the counsel, purpose, and ordination of God in Christ Jesus, who is the true Book of Life, is revealed to us ruf, Gerech- und Seligmachung, zusammengefaßt werde; wie Paulus also diesen Artikel handelt und erklärt Röm. 8; Eph. 1, wie auch Christus in der Parabel Matth. 22, nämlich, daß Gott in seinem Vorfaß und Rat verordnet habe:

1. Daß wahrhaftig das menschliche Geschlecht erlöst und mit Gott versöhnt sei durch Christum, der uns mit seinem unschuldigen Gehorsam, Leiden und Sterben Gerechtigkeit, die vor Gott gilt, und das ewige Leben verdient habe.

2. Daß solch Verdienst und Wohlthaten Christi durch sein Wort und Sakrament uns sollen vorgetragen, dargereicht und ausgeteilt werden.

3. Daß er mit seinem Heiligen Geist durch das Wort, wenn es gepredigt, gehört und betrachtet wird, in uns wolle kräftig und tätig sein, die Herzen zu wahrer Buße befehlen und im rechten Glauben erhalten.

4. Daß er alle die, so in wahrer Buße durch rechten Glauben Christum annehmen, gerecht machen, sie zu Gnaden, zur Kindschaft und Erbschaft des ewigen Lebens annehmen wolle.

5. Daß er auch, die also gerechtfertigt, heiligen wolle in der Liebe, wie St. Paulus Eph. 1 sagt.

6. Daß er sie auch in ihrer großen Schwachheit wider Teufel, Welt und Fleisch schütze und auf seinen Wegen regieren und führen, da sie straucheln, wieder aufrichten, in Kreuz und Anfechtung trösten und erhalten wolle.

7. Daß er auch in ihnen das gute Werk, so er angefangen hat, stärken, mehren und sie bis ans Ende erhalten wolle, wo sie [wenn sie] an Gottes Wort sich halten, fleißig beten, an Gottes Güte bleiben und die empfangenen Gaben treulich brauchen.

8. Daß er endlich dieselben, so er erwählt, berufen und gerecht gemacht hat, auch im ewigen Leben ewig selig und herrlich machen wolle.

Und hat Gott in solchem seinem Rat, Vorfaß und Verordnung nicht allein insgemein die Seligkeit bereitet, sondern hat auch alle und jede Personen der Auserwählten, so durch Christum sollen selig werden, in Gnaden bedacht, zur Seligkeit erwählt, auch verordnet, daß er sie auf die Weise, wie jetzt gemeldet, durch seine Gnade, Gaben und Wirkung dazu bringen, helfen, fördern, stärken und erhalten wolle.

Dieses alles wird nach der Schrift in der Lehre von der ewigen Wahl Gottes zur Kindschaft und ewigen Seligkeit begriffen, soll auch darunter verstanden und nimmer ausgeschloffen noch unterlassen werden, wenn man redet von dem Vorfaß, Vorsehung, Wahl und Verordnung Gottes zur Seligkeit. Und wenn also nach der Schrift die voluntate et ordinatione Dei (omnia videlicet, quae ad nostram redemptionem, vocationem, iustificationem et salutem pertinent) simul mente complectamur. Sic enim divus Paulus hunc articulum in scriptis suis, Rom. 8, 29 sq.; Eph. 1, 4 sq., tractavit et explicuit, idem fecit Christus in parabola illa de nuptiis regis, Matth. 22, 1 sqq., quod videlicet Deus in suo consilio et proposito decreverit haec:

15] I. Ut humanum genus vere redimeretur atque cum Deo per Christum reconciliaretur, qui nobis innocentia atque perfectissima obedientia, passione ac morte acerbissima iustitiam, quae coram ipso valet, et vitam aeternam promeruit.

16] II. Ut Christi meritum eiusque beneficia per Verbum et sacramenta nobis offerrentur, exhiberentur et distribuarentur.

17] III. Decrevit etiam, se Spiritu Sancto suo per Verbum annuntiatum, auditione perceptum et memoriae commendatum velle in nobis efficacem esse et corda ad veram poenitentiam agendam inflectere et in vera fide conservare.

18] IV. Illius aeternum propositum est, quod omnes, qui poenitentiam vere agunt et Christum vera fide amplectuntur, iustificare, in gratiam recipere et in filios et heredes vitae aeternae adoptare velit.

19] V. Et quod fide iustificatos in vera caritate sanctificare velit, ut apostolus testatur Eph. 1, 4.

20] VI. Item in aeterno suo consilio proposuit, se iustificatos etiam in multiplici et varia ipsorum infirmitate adversus diabolum, mundum et carnem defensurum et in [R. 803] viis suis deducturum atque gubernaturum et, si lapsi fuerint, manum suppositurum, ut in cruce atque tentationibus solidam consolationem percipiant atque ad vitam conserventur.

21] VII. Illius aeternum decretum est, quod opus illud bonum a se in illis inceptum promovere atque confirmare et ad finem usque conservare velit, si modo Verbo ipsius tamquam scipioni constanter innitatur, ipsius opem ardentibus precibus implorent, in gratia Dei perseverent et dona accepta fideliter et bene collocent.

22] VIII. Ille idem in aeterno consilio suo decrevit, quod eos, quos elegit, vocavit, iustificavit, in altera aeterna illa vita salvos facere et aeterna gloria ornare velit.

23] Et quidem Deus illo suo consilio, proposito et ordinatione non tantum in genere salutem suorum procuravit, verum etiam omnes et singulas personas electorum (qui per Christum salvandi sunt) clementer praescivit, ad salutem elegit et decrevit, quod eo modo (quem iam recitavimus) ipsos per suam gratiam, dona atque efficaciam salutis aeternae participes facere, iuvare, eorum salutem promovere, ipsos confirmare et conservare velit.

24] Haec omnia secundum Scripturam in articulo praedestinationis et aeternae electionis divinae ad adoptionem in filios et ad aeternam salutem comprehenduntur, universa illa, de quibus diximus, sub hoc articulo complecti debemus, nec quidquam horum excludendum aut omittendum est, quando de proposito Dei, through the Word, namely, that the entire doctrine concerning the purpose, counsel, will, and ordination of God pertaining to our redemption, call, justification, and salvation should be taken together; as Paul treats and has explained this article Rom. 8, 29 f.; Eph. 1, 4 f., as also Christ in the parable, Matt. 22, 1 ff., namely, that God in His purpose and counsel ordained [decreed]:

1. That the human race is truly redeemed and reconciled with God through Christ, who, by His faultless [innocency] obedience, suffering, and death, has merited for us the righteousness which avails before God, and eternal life.

2. That such merit and benefits of Christ shall be presented, offered, and distributed to us through His Word and Sacraments.

3. That by His Holy Ghost, through the Word, when it is preached, heard, and pondered, He will be efficacious and active in us, convert hearts to true repentance, and preserve them in the true faith.

4. That He will justify all those who in true repentance receive Christ by a true faith, and will receive them into grace, the adoption of sons, and the inheritance of eternal life.

5. That He will also sanctify in love those who are thus justified, as St. Paul says, Eph. 1, 4.

6. That He also will protect them in their great weakness against the devil, the world, and the flesh, and rule and lead them in His ways, raise them again [place His hand beneath them], when they stumble, comfort them under the cross and in temptation, and preserve them [for life eternal].

7. That He will also strengthen, increase, and support to the end the good work which He has begun in them, if they adhere to God's Word, pray diligently, abide in God's goodness [grace], and faithfully use the gifts received.

8. That finally He will eternally save and glorify in life eternal those whom He has elected, called, and justified.

And [indeed] in this His counsel, purpose, and ordination God has prepared salvation not only in general, but has in grace considered and chosen to salvation each and every person of the elect who are to be saved through Christ, also ordained that in the way just mentioned He will, by His grace, gifts, and efficacy, bring them thereto [make them participants of eternal salvation], aid, promote, strengthen, and preserve them.

All this, according to the Scriptures, is comprised in the doctrine concerning the eternal election of God to adoption and eternal salvation, and is to be understood by it, and never excluded nor omitted, when we speak of God's purpose, predestination, election, and ordination to salvation. And when our Gebanken von diesem Artikel gefaßt werden, so kann man sich durch Gottes Gnade einseitig darein richten.

Es gehört auch dies zu fernerer Erklärung und heilsamem [Ge]brauch der Lehre von der Vor-sehung Gottes zur Seligkeit: weil allein die Aus-erwählten selig werden, deren Namen geschrieben stehen im Buch des Lebens, wie man das wissen, woraus und wobei erkennen könne, welche die Auserwählten sind, die sich dieser Lehre zum Trost annehmen können und sollen.

Und hieron sollen wir nicht erteilen nach unserer Vernunft, auch nicht nach dem Gesetz oder aus einigem äußerlichen Schein; auch sollen wir uns nicht unterstehen, den heimlichen, verborgenen Ab-grund göttlicher Vor-sehung zu [er]forschen, sondern auf den geoffenbarten Willen Gottes acht-geben. Denn „er hat uns offenbaret und wissen lassen das Geheimnis seines Willens und hat das-selbige hervorgebracht durch Christum, daß es geprediget werde“, Eph. 1: 2 Tim. 1.

Daselbe aber wird uns also geoffenbart, wie Paulus spricht Röm. 8: „Die Gott versehen, erwählet und verordnet hat, die hat er auch be-rufen.“ Nun beruft Gott nicht ohne Mittel, sondern durch das Wort, wie er denn befohlen hat, zu predigen Buße und Vergebung der Sünden.
Vergleichen bezeugt auch St. Paulus, da er geschrieben: „Wir sind Botschafter an Christus“ Statt, und Gott vermahnet durch uns: Lasset euch versöhnen mit Gott!“ 2 Kor. 5. Und die haben will, läßt er durch seine ausgesandten Diener berufen, Matth. 22, etliche zur ersten, etliche zur andern, dritten, sechsten, neunten, auch wohl zur elften Stunde, Matth. 20.

Derhalben, wenn wir unsere ewige Wahl zur thoughts concerning this article are thus formed according to the Scriptures, we can by God's grace simply [and correctly] adapt ourselves to it [and advantageously treat of it].

This also belongs to the further explanation and salutary use of the doctrine concerning God's foreknowledge [predestination] to salvation: Since only the elect, whose names are written in the book of life, are saved, how we can know, whence and whereby we can perceive who are the elect that can and should receive this doctrine for comfort.

And of this we should not judge according to our reason, nor according to the Law or from any external appearance. Neither should we attempt to investigate the secret, concealed abyss of divine predestination, but should give heed to the revealed will of God. For He has made known unto us the mystery of His will, and made it manifest through Christ that it might be preached, Eph. 1, 9 ff.; 2 Tim. 1, 9 f.

This, however, is revealed to us in the manner as Paul says, Rom. 8, 29 f.: Whom God predestinated, elected, and foreordained, He also called. Now, God does not call without means, but through the Word, as He has commanded repentance and remission of sins to be preached in His name, Luke 24, 47. St. Paul also testifies to like effect when he writes: We are ambassadors for Christ, as though God did beseech you by us; we pray you in Christ's stead, Be ye reconciled to God. 2 Cor. 5, 20. And the guests whom the King will have at the wedding of His Son He calls through His ministers sent forth, Matt. 22, 2 ff., some at the first and some at the second, third, sixth, ninth, and even at the eleventh hour, Matt. 20, 3 ff.

Therefore, if we wish to consider our eternal election to salvation with profit, we must in every way hold sturdily and firmly to this, that, as the preaching of repentance, so also the promise of the Gospel is universalis (universal), that is, it pertains to all men, Luke 24, 47. For this reason Christ has commanded that repentance and remission of sins should be preached in His name among ALL nations. For God loved the WORLD and gave His Son, John 3, 16. Christ bore the sins of the WORLD, John 1, 29, gave His flesh for the life of the WORLD, John 6, 51; His blood is the propitiation for the sins of the WHOLE WORLD, 1 John 1, 7; 2, 2. Christ says: Come unto Me, ALL ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest, Matt. 11, 28. God hath concluded them ALL in unbelief, that He might have mercy upon ALL, Rom. 11, 32. The Lord is not willing that ANY should perish, but that ALL should come to repentance, 2 Pet. 3, 9. The same Lord over all is rich unto ALL that call upon Him, Rom. 10, 12. The righteousness of God, which is by faith of Jesus Christ, unto ALL and upon ALL them that believe, Rom. 3, 22. This is the will of Him that sent Me, that EVERY ONE that seeth the Son and believeth on Him may have everlasting life, gemein allen, denen Buße gepredigt wird, auch diese Verheißung des Evangelii soll vorgetragen werden, Luf. 24; Mark. 16.

Und solchen Beruf Gottes, so durch die Predigt des Wortes geschieht, sollen wir für kein Spiegelfechten halten, sondern wissen, daß dadurch Gott seinen Willen offenbart, daß er in denen, die er also beruft, durchs Wort wirken wolle, daß sie erleuchtet, belehrt und selig werden mögen. Denn das Wort, dadurch wir berufen werden, ist ein Amt des Geistes, das den Geist gibt oder dadurch der Geist gegeben wird, 2 Kor. 3, und eine Kraft Gottes, selig zu machen, Röm. 1. Und weil der Heilige Geist durchs Wort kräftig sein, stärken, Kraft und Vermögen geben will, so ist Gottes Wille, daß wir das Wort annehmen, glauben und demselben folgen sollen.

Daher werden die Auserwählten also beschrieben Joh. 10: „Meine Schafe hören meine Stimme, und ich kenne sie, und sie folgen mir; und ich gebe ihnen das ewige Leben.“ Und Eph. 1: „Die nach dem Vorsatz verordnet sind zum Erbteil“, die hören das Evangelium, glauben an Christum, beten und danken, werden geheiligt in der Liebe, haben Hoffnung, Geduld und Trost im Kreuz, Röm. 8; und ob dies alles gleich sehr schwach in ihnen ist, haben sie doch Hunger und Durst nach der Gerechtigkeit, Matth. 5.

Also „gibt der Geist Gottes den Auserwählten Zeugnis, daß sie Kinder Gottes sind; und da sie nicht wissen, was sie beten sollen, wie sich's gebührt, vertritt er sie mit unaussprechlichem Seufzen“, Röm. 8.

So zeugt auch die Heilige Schrift, daß Gott, der uns berufen hat, so getreu sei, wenn er das gute Werk in uns angefangen hat, daß er's auch bis ans Ende erhalten und vollführen wolle, wo wir uns nicht selbst von ihm abkehren, sondern das angefangene Wesen bis ans Ende fest behalten, dazu er denn seine Gnade verheißt hat, 1 Kor. 1; Phil. 1; 2 Petr. 3; Hebr. 3.

Mit diesem geoffenbarten Willen Gottes sollen wir uns bekümmern, demselben folgen und uns desselben bestrengen, weil der Heilige Geist durchs Wort, dadurch er uns beruft, Gnade, Kraft und Vermögen dazu verleiht, und den Abgrund der verborgenen Vorsehung Gottes nicht forschen, wie Luf. 13 geschrieben, da einer fragt: „Herr, meinst du, daß wenig selig werden?“ antwortet Christus: „Ringet ihr danach, daß ihr durch die enge Pforte einsehet!“ Also spricht Lutherus: „Folge du der Epistel zu'n Römern in ihrer Ordnung, bekümmere dich zuvor mit Christo und seinem Evangelio, daß du deine Sünde und seine Gnade erkennest, danach mit der Sünde streitest, wie Paulus vom ersten bis ins achte Kapitel lehrt; danach, wenn du im achten Kapitel in Anfechtung unter Kreuz und Leiden kommen wirst, daß wir dunt, vitam aeternam habeant, Ioh. 6, 40. Et vult Christus, ut in genere omnibus, quibus poenitentia agenda praedicatur, etiam haec promissio evangelii proponatur, Luc. 24, 47; Marc. 16, 15.

29] Et hanc vocationem Dei, quae per verbum evangelii nobis offertur, non existimemus esse simulatam et fucatam, sed certo statuamus, Deum nobis per eam vocationem voluntatem suam revelare, quod videlicet in iis, quos ad eum modum vocat, per Verbum efficax esse velit, ut illuminentur, convertantur et salventur. Verbum enim illud, quo vocamur, ministerium Spiritus est, 2 Cor. 3, 8, quod Spiritum Sanctum affert, seu per quod Spiritus Sanctus hominibus confertur, et est virtus Dei ad salutem omni credenti, Rom. 1, 16. Cum igitur Spiritus Sanctus per Verbum efficax esse, nos corroborare et vires subministrare velit, profecto vult Dominus, ut verbum evangelii recipiamus, ei credamus atque pareamus.

30] Qua de causa electi his notis in sacris litteris, ab aliis discernendi, describuntur: Oves meae vocem meam audiunt, et ego [R. 806 cognosco eas, et sequuntur me; et ego illis do vitam aeternam, Ioh. 10, 27 sq. Et Eph. 1, 11. 13: Qui secundum propositum ordinati sunt ad capiendam hereditatem, audiunt evangelium, credunt in Christum, invocant Deum eique gratias agunt, sanctificantur in caritate, perseverant in spe, patientia et consolatione sub cruce, Rom. 8, 25. Et quamvis haec bona omnia in ipsis adhuc tenuia atque infirma sint, tamen esuriunt et sitiunt iustitiam, Matth. 5, 6.

33] Hanc revelatam Dei voluntatem inquiramus, meditemur, atque, ut eidem pareamus, sedulo elaboremus, quandoquidem Spiritus Sanctus per Verbum (quo nos vocat) gratiam, vires et facultatem largiri vult; arcanæ autem et occultae praedestinationis divinae abyssum perscrutari ne conemur. In hanc sententiam Christus cuidam curiose interroganti, an pauci salvarentur, respondit [Luc. 13, 24]: Contendite, ut intretis per angustam portam. Et D. Lutherus inquit (in praef. sup. ep. ad Rom.): Eodem ordine, quem Paulus in epistola ad Romanos observavit, procede. Prima tua cura sit de Christo eiusque evangelio, ut et tua peccata et ipsius gratiam atque clementiam agnoscas. Deinde luctare cum peccato, sicut docet Paulus a primo capite usque ad

John 6, 40. Likewise it is Christ's command that to all in common to whom repentance is preached this promise of the Gospel also should be offered Luke 24, 47; Mark 16, 15.

And this call of God, which is made through the preaching of the Word, we should not regard as jugglery, but know that thereby God reveals His will, that in those whom He thus calls He will work through the Word, that they may be enlightened, converted, and saved. For the Word, whereby we are called, is a ministration of the Spirit, that gives the Spirit, or whereby the Spirit is given, 2 Cor. 3, 8, and a power of God unto salvation, Rom. 1, 16. And since the Holy Ghost wishes to be efficacious through the Word, and to strengthen and give power and ability, it is God's will that we should receive the Word, believe and obey it.

For this reason the elect are described thus, John 10, 27 f.: My sheep hear My voice, and I know them, and they follow Me, and I give unto them eternal life. And Eph. 1, 11, 13: Those who according to the purpose are predestinated to an inheritance hear the Gospel, believe in Christ, pray and give thanks, are sanctified in love, have hope, patience, and comfort under the cross, Rom. 8, 25; and although all this is very weak in them, yet they hunger and thirst after righteousness, Matt. 5, 6.

Thus the Spirit of God gives to the elect the testimony that they are children of God, and when they do not know for what they should pray as they ought, He intercedes for them with groanings that cannot be uttered, Rom. 8, 16, 26.

Thus, also, Holy Scripture testifies that God, who has called us, is so faithful that, when He has begun the good work in us, He also will preserve it to the end and perfect it, if we ourselves do not turn from Him, but firmly retain to the end the work begun, for which He has promised His grace, 1 Cor. 1, 9; Phil. 1, 6 [1 Pet. 5, 10]; 2 Pet. 3, 9; Heb. 3, 2.

With this revealed will of God we should concern ourselves, follow and be diligently engaged upon [eagerly con] it, because through the Word, whereby He calls us, the Holy Ghost bestows grace, power, and ability to this end, and should not [attempt to] sound the abyss of God's hidden predestination, as it is written in Luke 13, 24, where one asks: Lord, are there few that be saved? and Christ answers: Strive to enter in at the strait gate. Accordingly, Luther says [in the Preface to the Epistle to the Romans]: Follow the Epistle to the Romans in its order, concern yourself first with Christ and His Gospel, that you may recognize your sins and His grace; next, that you contend with sin, as Paul teaches from the first to the eighth chapter; then, when in diß lehren im neunten, zehnten und elften Kapitel die Vorsehung, wie tröstlich die sei^e usw.

Daß aber „viele berufen sind und wenige erwählt“, kommt nicht daher, daß es mit Gottes Beruf, so durchs Wort geschieht, die Meinung haben sollte, als spräche Gott: äußerlich, durchs Wort, berufe ich euch wohl alle, denen ich mein Wort gebe, zu meinem Reich, aber im Herzen meine ich's nicht mit allen, sondern nur mit etlichen wenigen; denn es ist mein Wille, daß der größte Theil von denen, so ich durchs Wort berufe, nicht sollen erleuchtet und befehrt werden, sondern verdammt sein und bleiben, ob ich mich gleich durchs Wort im Beruf anders gegen sie erkläre. Hoc enim esset Deo contradictorias voluntates affingere. Das ist, solchergestalt würde gelehrt, daß Gott, der doch die ewige Wahrheit ist, ihm selbst [sich selbst] zuwider sein sollte; so doch Gott solche Untugend, da man sich eines Dinges erklärt und ein anderes im Herzen gebent und meint, auch an Menschen straft, Ps. 5 und 12. Dadurch uns auch der nötige, tröstliche Grund gänzlich ungewiß und zunichte gemacht [wird], da wir täglich erinnert und vermahnt werden, daß wir allein aus Gottes Wort, dadurch er mit uns handelt und uns beruft, lernen und schließen sollen, was sein Wille gegen uns sei; und was uns solches [Wort Gottes] zusagt und verheißt, daß wir das gewiß glauben und daran nicht zweifeln sollen.

Verhalben auch Christus die Verheißung des Evangelii nicht allein läßt insgemein vortragen, sondern dieselbe durch die Sacramente, die er als Siegel der Verheißung angehängt, [versegelt] und damit einen jeden [einem jeden] Gläubigen insonderheit bestätigt.

Darum behalten wir auch, wie die Augsburgerische Confession articulo 11. sagt, die Privatabsolution und lehren, daß es Gottes Gebot sei, daß wir solcher Absolution glauben und für gewiß halten sollen, daß wir so wahrhaftig, wenn wir dem Wort der Absolution glauben, Gott versöhnt werden, als hätten wir eine Stimme vom Himmel gehört, wie die Apologia diesen Artikel erklärt; welcher Trost uns ganz und gar genommen [würde], wenn wir nicht aus dem Beruf, der durchs Wort und durch die Sacramente geschieht, von Gottes Willen gegen uns schließen sollten.

Es würde uns auch der Grund umgestoßen und genommen, daß der Heilige Geist bei dem gepredigten, gehörten, betrachteten Wort gewißlich gegenwärtig und dadurch kräftig sein und wirken wolle. Verhalben hat's die Meinung in keinem Wege, davon hievor Meldung geschehen, daß nämlich diejenigen die Auserwählten sein sollten, [* so durchs Wort berufen werden,] wenn sie gleich das Wort Gottes verachten, von sich stoßen, lästern und verfolgen, Matth. 22, Act. 13, oder wenn sie es hören, ihre Herzen verstopfen, Hebr. 4, dem Heiligen Geist widerstreben, Act. 7, ohne Buße in Sünden verharren, Luc. 14, an Christum nicht wahrhaftig glauben, Mark. 16, nur einen äußerlichen octavum. Postea ubi (in octavo capite) sub oruce, tentationibus et afflictionibus exercitatus fueris, nonum, decimum et undecimum caput recte te docebunt, quanta in prædestinatione divina consolatio reposita sit.

34) Quod autem multi vocati sunt, [R. 807 pauci vero electi [Matth. 20, 16], eius rei causa non est vocatio divina, quae per Verbum fit, quasi Dei haec sit sententia: Ego quidem vos, quibus Verbum meum propono, externe per id Verbum omnes voco ad regni mei coelestis participationem, at in corde meo non de omnibus serio ad salutem vocandis, sed de paucis tantum cogito. Voluntas enim mea haec est, ut maior eorum, quos per Verbum voco, pars neque illuminetur neque convertatur, sed condemnatur atque in aeterna morte maneat, etsi per Verbum meum, quo vocantur, aliter meam 35) illis mentem declaro etc. Hoc enim esset Deo contradictorias voluntates affingere, quasi is, qui aeterna veritas est, secum ipse dissentiret aut aliud loqueretur, aliud vero corde premeret. Hanc levitatem, hanc improbitatem (cum aliud verbis proponitur, aliud in corde fovetur) Deus ipse etiam in hominibus arguit et punit, ut David aliquoties testatur Ps. 5, 10; 36) 12, 3 sq. Et hac ratione fundamentum fidei nostrae maxime necessarium et consolationis verae plenissimum prorsus everteretur, ex quo nobis quotidie admonitiones hae afferuntur et inculcantur, quod ex solo Dei Verbo (per quod nobiscum agit nosque vocat) dicere atque statuere debeamus, quae sit ipsius erga nos voluntas, et quod omnia illa, quae nobis in Verbo Domini promittuntur, firma fide amplecti neque de iis ulla ratione dubitare debeamus.

37) Et quidem eam ipsam ob causam (ne de revelata Dei erga nos voluntate dubitemus) promissionem evangelii Christus non tantum generaliter proponi curat, sed etiam sacramenta promissioni annexere voluit, quibus tamquam sigillis ad promissionem appensis unicuique credenti promissionis evangelicae certitudinem confirmat.

38) Ea de causa retinemus etiam privatam absolutionem (ut Augustana Confessio [R. 808 articulo undecimo loquitur], docentes, Dei mandatum esse, ut absolutioni fidem habeamus ac certo statuamus, tam vere (quando verbis absolutionis fidem habemus) Deo reconciliatos nos esse, ac si vocem coelitus delapsam ea de re audissemus, quam sententiam etiam Apologia confirmat. Haec vero consolatio eximia prorsus nobis eriperetur, si non ex vocatione, quae fit per Verbum et sacramenta, de voluntate Dei erga nos statuendum esset.

39) Quin etiam illud fundamentum religionis nostrae everteretur, quod credimus, Spiritum Sanctum cum Verbo praedicato, audito et diligenter considerato praesentem atque efficacem esse et operari velle. Quare nequaquam sentiendum est, ut paulo ante monuimus, eos etiam in electorum numero habendos, qui Verbum Dei contemnunt, repellunt, execrantur atque persequuntur, Matth. 22, 6; Act. 13, 46, qui audito Verbo corda sua contra illud obfirmant, Hebr. 4, 2, 7, qui Spiritui Sancto resistunt, Act. 7, 51, qui in peccatis absque poenitentia perseverant, Luc. 14, 18, neque in Christum vere credunt, Marc. 16, 16, externa the eighth chapter you will come into [will have been exercised by] temptation under the cross and afflictions, this will teach you in the ninth, tenth, and eleventh chapters how consolatory predestination is, etc.

However, that many are called and few chosen is not owing to the fact that the call of God, which is made through the Word, had the meaning as though God said: Outwardly, through the Word, I indeed call to My kingdom all of you to whom I give My Word; however, in My heart I do not mean this with respect to all, but only with respect to a few; for it is My will that the greatest part of those whom I call through the Word shall not be enlightened nor converted, but be and remain damned, although through the Word, in the call, I declare Myself to them otherwise. Hoc enim esset Deo contradictorias voluntates affingere, that is: For this would be to assign contradictory wills to God. That is, in this way it would be taught that God, who surely is Eternal Truth, would be contrary to Himself [or say one thing, but revolve another in His heart], while, on the contrary, God [rebukes and] punishes also in men this wickedness [this wantonness, this dishonesty] when a person declares himself to one purpose, and thinks and means another in the heart, Ps. 5, 9; 12, 2 f. Thereby also the necessary consolatory foundation is rendered altogether uncertain and void, as we are daily reminded and admonished that only from God's Word, through which He treats with us and calls us, we are to learn and conclude what His will towards us is, and that we should believe and not doubt what it affirms to us and promises.

For this reason also Christ causes the promise of the Gospel not only to be offered in general, but He seals it through the Sacraments which He attaches as seals of the promise, and thereby confirms it [the certainty of the promise of the Gospel] to every believer in particular.

On this account, as the Augsburg Confession in Art. 11 says, we also retain private absolution, and teach that it is God's command that we believe such absolution, and should regard it as sure that, when we believe the word of absolution, we are as truly reconciled to God as though we had heard a voice from heaven, as the Apology explains this article. This consolation would be entirely taken from us if we were not to infer the will of God towards us from the call which is made through the Word and through the Sacraments.

There would also be overthrown and taken from us the foundation that the Holy Ghost wishes certainly to be present with the Word preached, heard, considered, and to be efficacious and operate through it. Therefore the meaning is not at all the one referred to above, namely, that the elect are to be such [among the elect are to be numbered such] as even despise the Word of God, thrust it from them, blaspheme and persecute it, Matt. 22, 6; Acts 13, 46; or, when they hear it, harden their hearts, Heb. 4, 2, 7; resist the Holy Ghost, Schein führen, Matth. 7 und 22, oder außer Christo andere Wege zur Gerechtigkeit und Seligkeit suchen, Röm. 9. Sondern wie Gott in seinem Rat berordnet hat, daß der Heilige Geist die Auserwählten durchs Wort berufen, erleuchten und befehlen, und daß er alle die, so durch rechten Glauben Christum annehmen, gerecht und selig machen wolle, also hat er auch in seinem Rat beschlossen, daß er diejenigen, so durchs Wort berufen werden, wenn sie das Wort von sich stoßen und dem Heiligen Geist, der in ihnen durchs Wort kräftig sein und wirken will, widerstreben und darin verharren, sie [daß er sie] verstoßen, verworfen und verdammen wolle. Und also [und so] sind viele berufen und wenige auserwählt.

Denn wenig nehmen das Wort an und folgen ihm; der größte Haufe verachtet das Wort und will zu der Hochzeit nicht kommen. Solcher Verachtung des Wortes ist nicht die Ursache Gottes Vorsehung, sondern des Menschen verkehrter Wille, der das Mittel und Werkzeug des Heiligen Geistes, so ihm Gott durch den Beruf vorträgt, von sich stößt oder verkehrt und dem Heiligen Geist, der durchs Wort kräftig sein will und wirkt, widerstrebt; wie Christus spricht: „Wie oft habe ich dich versammeln wollen, und du hast nicht gewollt!“ Matth. 23.

Also „nehmen ihrer viele das Wort mit Freuden an, aber danach fallen sie wieder ab“, Luc. 8. Die Ursache aber ist nicht, als wollte Gott ihnen, in welchen er das gute Wort angefangen, die Gnade zur Beständigkeit nicht geben; denn das ist wider St. Paulum, Phil. 1; sondern die Ursache ist: weil sie sich mutwillig von dem heiligen Gebot wieder abwenden, den Heiligen Geist betrüben und verbittern, in den Unflat der Welt sich wieder einschießen, dem Teufel die Herberge des Herzens wieder schmücken, mit welchen das letzte ärger wird denn das erste, 2 Petr. 2; Luc. 11; Hebr. 10.

Und so fern ist uns das Geheimnis der Vorsehung in Gottes Wort offenbart, und wenn wir dabei bleiben und uns daran halten, so ist es gar eine nützliche, heilsame, tröstliche Lehre; denn sie bestätigt gar gewaltig den Artikel, daß wir ohne alle unsere Werke und Verdienst, lauter aus Gnaden, allein um Christus' willen gerecht und selig werden. Denn vor der Zeit der Welt, ehe wir gewesen sind, ja ehe der Welt Grund gelegt [ward], da wir ja nichts Gutes haben tun können, sind wir nach Gottes Vorsatz aus Gnaden in Christo zur Seligkeit erwählt, Röm. 9; 2 Tim. 1. Es werden auch dadurch alle opinionen und irrige Lehren von den Kräften unsers natürlichen Willens ernieder-[banieder]-gelegt, weil Gott in seinem Rat vor der Zeit der Welt bedacht und berordnet hat, daß er alles, was zu unserer Bekehrung gehört, selbst mit der Kraft seines Heiligen Geistes durchs Wort in uns schaffen und wirken wolle.

tantum specie pietatem prae se ferunt, Matth. 7, 22; 22, 12, aut extra Christum alias iustitiae et salutis rationes quaerunt, Rom. 9, 31. 40] Ut enim Deus in aeterno suo consilio ordinavit, ut Spiritus Sanctus electos per Verbum vocet, illuminet atque convertat, atque omnes illos, qui Christum vera fide amplectuntur, iustificet atque in eos aeternam salutem conferat: ita in eodem suo consilio decrevit, quod eos, qui per Verbum vocati illud repudiant et Spiritui Sancto (qui in ipsis per Verbum efficaciter operari et efficax esse vult) resistunt et obstinati in ea contumacia perseverant, indurare, reprobare et aeternae damnationi devovere velit. Et secundum has rationes intelligendum est, quod Scriptura dicit, multos vocatos, paucos vero electos esse.

41] Pauci enim Verbum Dei serio recipiunt eique sincere obtemperant; maior pars contemnit Verbum neque in regis illis [R. 809] nuptiis vult comparere, Matth. 22, 3 sqq. Huius contemptus Verbi non est in causa vel praescientia vel praedestinatione Dei, sed perversa hominis voluntas, quae medium illud et instrumentum Spiritus Sancti, quod Deus homini per vocationem offert, reicit aut depravat et Spiritui Sancto, qui per Verbum efficaciter operari cupit, repugnat, sicut Christus dicit Matth. 23, 37: Quoties volui congregare te, et noluisti.

42] Multi quidem Verbum Dei initio magno gaudio recipiunt, sed postea rursus deficiunt, Luc. 8, 13. Eius autem rei causa non haec est, quasi Deus illis, in quibus bonum illud opus iam inceptum, gratiam suam ad perseverandum dare nolit; hoc enim cum Pauli verbis Phil. 1, 6 pugnat; sed vera causa defectionis ipsorum est, quod sese a sancto Dei praecepto rursus, et quidem petulanter, avertunt, quod Spiritum Sanctum contristant et exasperant, quod coinquinationibus huius mundi rursus sese implicant et Satanae hospitium cordis sui adornant. Horum hominum posteriora deteriora sunt prioribus, 2 Petr. 2, 10. 20; Eph. 4, 30; Hebr. 10, 26; Luc. 11, 25.

43] Hucusque Sacra Scriptura in revelando divinae praedestinationis mysterio progreditur. Quodsi intra has metas nos continuerimus et Verbo Dei revelato innixi fuerimus, profecto doctrina illa amplissima consolationis verae materiam nobis suppeditabit. Egrege enim praedestinationis doctrina articulum iustificationis confirmat, quod videlicet gratuito, sine omnibus operibus et meritis nostris, ex mera gratia, propter solum Christum iustificemur atque salvemur. Ante saecula enim huius mundi, priusquam in rerum natura essemus, imo antequam mundi fundamenta iacerentur, cum quidem nihil boni agere adhuc poteramus, secundum propositum Dei in Christo ad aeternam salutem electi sumus, Rom. 44] 9, 11; 2 Tim. 1, 9. Hac etiam doctrina omnes falsae opinioniones et errores de viribus naturalis nostri arbitrii evertuntur, [R. 810] quia manifestum est, quod Deus in suo consilio ante mundi saecula decreverit atque ordinavit, quod omnia, quae ad conversionem nostram pertinent, ipse virtute Spiritus sui Sancti (per Verbum) in nobis efficere et operari velit.

Acts 7, 51; without repentance persevere in sins, Luke 14, 18; do not truly believe in Christ, Mark 16, 16; only make [godliness] an outward show, Matt. 7, 22; 22, 12; or seek other ways to righteousness and salvation outside of Christ, Rom. 9, 31. Moreover, even as God has ordained in His [eternal] counsel that the Holy Ghost should call, enlighten, and convert the elect through the Word, and that He will justify and save all those who by true faith receive Christ, so He also determined in His counsel that He will harden, reprobate, and condemn those who are called through the Word, if they reject the Word and resist the Holy Ghost, who wishes to be efficacious and to work in them through the Word, and persevere therein. And in this manner many are called, but few are chosen.

For few receive the Word and follow it; the greatest number despise the Word, and will not come to the wedding, Matt. 22, 3 ff. The cause for this contempt for the Word is not God's foreknowledge [or predestination], but the perverse will of man, which rejects or perverts the means and instrument of the Holy Ghost, which God offers him through the call, and resists the Holy Ghost, who wishes to be efficacious, and works through the Word, as Christ says: How often would I have gathered you together, and ye would not! Matt. 23, 37.

Thus many receive the Word with joy, but afterwards fall away again, Luke 8, 13. But the cause is not as though God were unwilling to grant grace for perseverance to those in whom He has begun the good work, for that is contrary to St. Paul, Phil. 1, 6; but the cause is that they wilfully turn away again from the holy commandment [of God], grieve and embitter the Holy Ghost, implicate themselves again in the filth of the world, and garnish again the habitation of the heart for the devil. With them the last state is worse than the first, 2 Pet. 2, 10, 20; Eph. 4, 30; Heb. 10, 26; Luke 11, 25.

Thus far is the mystery of predestination revealed to us in God's Word, and if we abide thereby and cleave thereto, it is a very useful, salutary, consolatory doctrine; for it establishes very effectually the article that we are justified and saved without all works and merits of ours, purely out of grace alone, for Christ's sake. For before the time of the world, before we existed, yea, before the foundation of the world was laid, when, of course, we could do nothing good, we were according to God's purpose chosen by grace in Christ to salvation, Rom. 9, 11; 2 Tim. 1, 9. Moreover, all opiniones (opinions) and erroneous doctrines concerning the powers of our natural will are thereby overthrown, because God in His counsel, before the time of the world, decided and ordained that He Himself, by the power of His Holy Ghost, would produce and work in us, through the Word, everything that pertains to our conversion.

Es gibt auch also diese Lehre den schönen, herrlichen Trost, daß Gott eines jeden Christen Belehrung, Gerechtigkeit und Seligkeit so hoch ihm [so hoch sich hat] angelegen sein lassen und es so treulich damit gemeint, daß er, ehe der Welt Grund gelegt, darüber Rat gehalten und in seinem Vorsatz verordnet hat, wie er mich dazu bringen und darin erhalten wolle; item, daß er meine Seligkeit so wohl und gewiß habe vermahnen wollen, weil sie durch Schwachheit und Bosheit unsers Fleisches aus unsern Händen leichtlich könnte verloren oder durch List und Gewalt des Teufels und der Welt daraus gerissen und genommen werden, daß er dieselbe in seinem ewigen Vorsatz, welcher nicht fehlen oder umgestoßen werden kann, verordnet und in die allmächtige Hand unsers Heilandes Jesu Christi, daraus uns niemand reißen kann, zu bewahren gelegt hat, Joh. 10; daher auch Paulus sagt Röm. 8: „Weil wir nach dem Vorsatz Gottes berufen sind, wer will uns denn scheiden von der Liebe Gottes in Christo?“

47) retur! Ideo Paulus certitudinem beatitudinis nostrae super fundamentum propositi divini extruit, cum ex eo, quod secundum propositum Dei vocati sumus, colligit, neminem nos posse separare a dilectione Dei, quae est in Christo Iesu, Domino nostro, Rom. 8, 28. 39.

Es gibt auch diese Lehre in Kreuz und Anfechtungen herrlichen Trost, nämlich daß Gott in seinem Rat vor der Zeit der Welt bedacht und beschlossen habe, daß er uns in allen Nöten beistehen, Geduld verleihen, Trost geben, Hoffnung wirken und einen solchen Ausgang verschaffen wolle, daß es uns seliglich sein möge. Item, wie Paulus dies gar tröstlich handelt Röm. 8, daß Gott in seinem Vorsatz vor der Zeit der Welt verordnet habe, durch was Kreuz und Leiden er einen jeden seiner Auserwählten gleich wollte machen dem Ebenbilde seines Sohnes, und daß einem jeden sein Kreuz zum besten dienen solle und müsse, weil sie nach dem Vorsatz berufen sind; daraus Paulus für gewiß und ungetrübelt geschlossen, daß weder Trübsal noch Angst, weder Tod noch Leben usw. uns scheiden können von der Liebe Gottes in Christo Jesu.

prii omnes secundum propositum Dei sint vocati. tribulatio neque angustia, neque vita neque mors est in Christo Iesu.

Es gibt auch dieser Artikel ein herrlich Zeugnis, daß die Kirche Gottes wider alle Pforten der Hölle sein und bleiben werde, und lehrt auch, welches die rechte Kirche Gottes sei, daß wir uns an dem großen Ansehen der falschen Kirche nicht ärgern, Röm. 9.

Es werden auch aus diesem Artikel mächtige Vermahnungen und Warnungen genommen, als Luk. 7: „Sie verachten Gottes Rat wider sich selbst.“ Luk. 14: „Ich sage euch, daß der Männer keiner mein Abendmahl schmecken wird.“ Item: „Viele sind berufen, aber wenige auserwählt.“ Item: „Wer Ohren hat zu hören, der höre, und: „Sehet zu, wie ihr höret!“ Also kann die Lehre von diesem Artikel nützlich, tröstlich und seliglich gebraucht werden.

Es muß aber mit [be]sonderem Fleiß Unterschied gehalten werden zwischen dem, was in Got-

45) Quin etiam haec doctrina praeclaram nobis consolationem monstrat. Quantum enim est hoc beneficium Dei, quod is de uniuscuiusque Christiani conversione, iustitia et salute adeo sollicitus fuit atque tam fideliter procuravit, ut ante iacta fundamenta mundi deliberaverit atque in illo arcano suo proposito iam tum ordinaverit, quomodo me ad salutem vocare, adducere et in illa conservare velit! Quid? quod meam salutem adeo firmis praesidiis munire voluit, ut eam in aeternum suum propositum (quod falli aut everti nunquam potest) tamquam in arcem munitissimam collocaret atque adeo in omnipotenti manu Domini nostri Iesu Christi (unde nemo rapere nos potest, Joh. 10, 28) conservandam 46) poneret. Si enim nobis tutela et defensio nostrae salutis committeretur, Deus bone, quam levi momento eam propter infirmitatem, pravitatem et corruptionem carnis nostrae amitteremus! quam facile ea nobis per insidias et vim diaboli atque mundi machinas e nostris manibus extorqueretur atque eripe-

48) In afflictionibus vero et gravibus temptationibus dulcissimam ex hoc articulo consolationem petere licet. Docemur enim, Deum in consilio suo ante saecula mundi decrevisse, quod in omnibus calamitatibus, miseriis et angustiiis nobis adesse, tolerantiam sub cruce largiri, consolari nos, spem Christianam excuscitare, alere et nutantem erigere, talemque tandem eventum dare velit, ut omnia [R. 811 mala ad salutem nostram cedant eamque pro- 49) moveant. Unde et divus Paulus egregiam consolationem ex hoc articulo depromit, cum docet Rom. 8, 28. 29. 35. 38. 39. Deum in suo proposito ante tempora mundi ordinasse, quasnam tribulationes et quod crucis genus Dominus singulis Christianis imponere velit, ut omnes conformes fiant imagini Filii sui, et ostendit, quod unicuique pio sua crux in bonum cedat seu cooperetur, propterea quod Ac tandem universa complectitur, quod neque etc. possit nos separare a dilectione Dei, quae

50) Praeterea hic articulus luculenter testatur, quod ecclesia Dei adversus omnes inferorum portas et impetus sit mansura, et docet, quae sit vera Dei ecclesia, ne magna illa falsae ecclesiae auctoritate et angusta illius specie offendamur, Rom. 9, 24. 25.

51) Et ex hoc articulo multae gravissimae admonitiones et exhortationes depromuntur, ut Luc. 7, 30: Contemnunt Dei consilium adversus semet ipsos. Et Luc. 14, 24: Dico vobis, quod nemo virorum illorum gustaturus sit coenam meam. Et alibi [Matth. 20, 16]: Multi vocati sunt, pauci vero electi. Et rursus [Luc. 8, 8. 18]: Qui aures habet audiendi, audiat, et: Videte, quomodo audiat! Atque ita doctrina de hoc articulo salutaris est, plena consolationis et ad usum nostrum multis modis transferri potest.

52) Accurate autem discrimen observandum est retinendum est inter id, quod de hoc negotio

Thus this doctrine affords also the excellent, glorious consolation that God was so greatly concerned about the conversion, righteousness, and salvation of every Christian, and so faithfully purposed it [provided therefor] that before the foundation of the world was laid, He deliberated concerning it, and in His [secret] purpose ordained how He would bring me thereto [call and lead me to salvation], and preserve me therein. Also, that He wished to secure my salvation so well and certainly that, since through the weakness and wickedness of our flesh it could easily be lost from our hands, or through craft and might of the devil and the world be snatched and taken from us, He ordained it in His eternal purpose, which cannot fail or be overthrown, and placed it for preservation in the almighty hand of our Savior Jesus Christ, from which no one can pluck us, John 10, 28. Hence Paul also says, Rom. 8, 28. 39: Because we have been called according to the purpose of God, who will separate us from the love of God in Christ? [Paul builds the certainty of our blessedness upon the foundation of the divine purpose, when, from our being called according to the purpose of God, he infers that no one can separate us, etc.]

Moreover, this doctrine affords glorious consolation under the cross and amid temptations, namely, that God in His counsel, before the time of the world, determined and decreed that He would assist us in all distresses [anxieties and perplexities], grant patience [under the cross], give consolation, excite [nourish and encourage] hope, and produce such an outcome as would contribute to our salvation. Also, as Paul in a very consolatory way treats this, Rom. 8, 28. 29. 35. 38. 39, that God in His purpose has ordained before the time of the world by what crosses and sufferings He would conform every one of His elect to the image of His Son, and that to every one His cross shall and must work together for good, because they are called according to the purpose, whence Paul has concluded that it is certain and indubitable that neither tribulation nor distress, nor death, nor life, etc., shall be able to separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus, our Lord.

This article also affords a glorious testimony that the Church of God will exist and abide in opposition to all the gates of hell, and likewise teaches which is the true Church of God, lest we be offended by the great authority [and majestic appearance] of the false Church, Rom. 9, 24. 25.

From this article also powerful admonitions and warnings are derived, as Luke 7, 30: They rejected the counsel of God against themselves. Luke 14, 24: I say unto you that none of those men which were bidden shall taste of my supper. Also Matt. 20, 16: Many be called, but few chosen. Also Luke 8, 8. 18: He that hath ears to hear, let him hear, and: Take heed how ye hear. Thus the doctrine concerning this article can be employed profitably, comfortingly, and savingly [and can be transferred in many ways to our use].

But a distinction must be observed with especial care between that which is expressly tes Wort ausdrücklich hiervon offenbart oder nicht offenbart ist. Denn über das [außer dem], davon bisher gesagt, so hiervon in Christo offenbart [ist], hat Gott von diesem Geheimnis noch viel verschwiegen und verborgen und allein seiner Weisheit und Erkenntnis vorbehalten, welches wir nicht erforschen noch unsern Gedanken hierin folgen, schließen oder grübeln, sondern uns an das geoffenbarte Wort halten sollen; welche Erinnerung zum höchsten nöthigen [ist].

Denn damit hat unser Vorwitz immer viel mehr Lust sich zu bekümmern als mit dem, das Gott uns in seinem Wort davon offenbart hat, weil wir's nicht zusammenreimen können, welches uns auch zu tun nicht befohlen ist.

Also ist daran kein Zweifel, daß Gott gar wohl und aufs allergewisseste vor der Zeit der Welt zuvor ersehen habe und noch wisse, welche von denen, so berufen werden, glauben oder nicht glauben werden; item, welche von den Bekehrten beständig, welche nicht beständig bleiben werden; welche nach dem Fall wiederkehren, welche in Verflodung fallen werden. So ist auch die Zahl, wie viele derselben beiderseits sein werden, Gott ohne allen Zweifel bewußt und bekannt. Weil aber solches Geheimnis Gott seiner Weisheit vorbehalten und uns im Wort davon nichts offenbart, viel weniger solches durch unsere Gedanken zu erforschen uns befohlen, sondern [uns] ernstlich davon abgehalten hat, Röm. 11, sollen wir mit unsern Gedanken nicht folgern, schließen noch darin grübeln, sondern uns an sein geoffenbartes Wort, darauf er uns weist, halten.

Also weiß auch Gott ohne allen Zweifel und hat einem jeden Zeit und Stunde seines Berufs, Bekehrung [* und Wiederbekehrung] bestimmt; weil aber uns solches nicht offenbart [ist], haben wir Befehl, daß wir immer mit dem Wort anhalten, die Zeit aber und Stunde Gott befehlen sollen, Act. 1.

Gleichfalls, wenn wir sehen, daß Gott sein Wort an einem Ort gibt, am andern nicht gibt, von einem Ort hinwegnimmt, am andern bleiben läßt; item, einer wird verflodt, verblendet, in verkehrten Sinn gegeben, ein anderer, so wohl in gleicher Schuld, wird wiederum bekehrt usw.: in diesen und dergleichen Fragen setzt uns Paulus ein gewisses Ziel, wie fern wir gehen sollen, nämlich daß wir bei einem Theil erkennen sollen Gottes Gericht. Denn es sind wohlverdiente Strafen der Sünden, wenn Gott an einem Lande oder Volk die Verachtung seines Wortes also strafft, daß es auch über die Nachkommen geht, wie an den Juden zu sehen; dadurch Gott den Seinen an etlichen Völkern und Personen seinen Ernst zeigt, was wir alle wohl verdient hätten, würdig und wert wären, weil wir uns gegen Gottes Wort übel verhalten und den Heiligen Geist oft schwerlich [schwer] betrüben; auf daß wir in Gottesfurcht leben und Gottes expresse in sacris litteris revelatum est, et inter ea, quae non sunt revelata. Praeter illa enim, de quibus hactenus dictum est, et quae in Christo manifeste revelata sunt, multa adhuc Dominus de hoc mysterio reticuit et occultavit, eaque soli suae sapientiae et scientiae reservavit. Talia investigare, cogitationibus nostris indulgere, aliquid de iis statuere aut scrutari nobis non licet, sed toti a [R. 812] Verbo Dei revelato, quod ipse nobis proponit, pendere debemus. Haec admonitio in hoc mysterio apprime necessaria est.

53] Ea enim est corruptae naturae nostrae curiositas, ut magis iis, quae abstrusa et arcana sunt, indagandis quam iis, quae de hoc negotio Deus in Verbo suo nobis revelavit, cognoscendis delectemur, praesertim cum quaedam in hoc mysterio tam intricata et perplexa occurrant, quae nos in mentibus nostris acumine ingenii nostri conciliare non possumus; sed neque id nobis a Deo demandatum est.

54] Dubium quidem non est, quin Deus exactissime et certissime ante tempora mundi praeviderit et hodie etiam norit, quinam ex eorum numero, qui vocati sunt, in Christum credituri aut non credituri sint; qui ex conversis in fide perseveraturi sint, qui non; et qui in peccata gravia prolapsi reversuri sint, et qui in sceleribus perituri. Et haud dubie etiam numerus eorum, qui salvabuntur, et 55] damnandorum Deo probe notus est. Quia vero Dominus talia arcana soli suae sapientiae reservavit, neque ea de re quidquam in Verbo suo revelavit, multo vero minus haec mysteria cogitationibus nostris indagare nos iussit, quin potius, ne id conaremur, prohibuit, Rom. 11, 33 sqq., non decet nos cogitationibus nostris indulgere, statuere aliquid, ratiocinari aut illa occultissima investigare velle, sed in Verbo ipsius revelato (ad quod ille nos ablegavit) acquiescere nos oportet.

56] Novit etiam Dominus procul dubio tempus et horam eamque apud se constituit, quando videlicet unumquemque vocare, convertere et lapsum rursus erigere velit. Quia vero id nobis non est revelatum, intelligimus hoc nobis iniungi serio, ut semper praedicando et tractando Dei Verbo instemus, tempus vero et horam conversionis Deo permittamus, Act. 1, 7.

57] Ad eundem modum, cum videmus, quod Deus Verbum suum alicui regno aut [R. 813] ditioni donat, idem vero alii genti non largitur; item, quod id ipsum ab uno populo aufert, alii vero diutius concedit; quod hic induratur, excaecatur et in reprobum sensum datur, ille vero, qui in eadem culpa haeret, ad Deum convertitur etc.: cavendum est diligenter, ne in his rebus expendendis cogitationibus nostris nimium indulgeamus. Paulus 58] Rom. 11, 22 sqq. autem certas metas nobis posuit, quousque progredi liceat. Iubet enim nos in illis, qui pereunt, considerare iustum Dei iudicium et poenas peccatorum. Sunt enim haec digna peccatis supplicia, si Deus totam aliquam provinciam aut gentem (propter Verbi divini contemptum) ita punit, ut hoc ingens malum etiam in ipsorum posteritatem redundet, ut est videre in obstinatis et revealed concerning it in God's Word, and what is not revealed. For, in addition to what has been revealed in Christ concerning this, of which we have hitherto spoken, God has still kept secret and concealed much concerning this mystery, and reserved it for His wisdom and knowledge alone, which we should not investigate, nor should we indulge our thoughts in this matter, nor draw conclusions, nor inquire curiously, but should adhere [entirely] to the revealed Word [of God]. This admonition is most urgently needed.

For our curiosity has always much more pleasure in concerning itself with these matters [with investigating those things which are hidden and abstruse] than with what God has revealed to us concerning this in His Word, because we cannot harmonize it, which, moreover, we have not been commanded to do [since certain things occur in this mystery so intricate and involved that we are not able by the penetration of our natural ability to harmonize them; but this has not been demanded of us by God].

Thus there is no doubt that God most exactly and certainly foresaw before the time of the world, and still knows, which of those that are called will believe or will not believe; also which of the converted will persevere [in faith] and which will not persevere; which will return after a fall [into grievous sins], and which will fall into obduracy [will perish in their sins]. So, too, the number, how many there are of these on either side, is beyond all doubt perfectly known to God. However, since God has reserved this mystery for His wisdom, and has revealed nothing to us concerning it in His Word, much less commanded us to investigate it with our thoughts, but has earnestly discouraged us therefrom, Rom. 11, 33 ff., we should not reason in our thoughts, draw conclusions, nor inquire curiously into these matters, but should adhere to His revealed Word, to which He points us.

Thus without any doubt God also knows and has determined for every one the time and hour of his call and conversion [and when He will raise again one who has lapsed]. But since this has not been revealed to us, we have the command always to keep urging the Word, but to entrust the time and hour [of conversion] to God, Acts 1, 7.

Likewise, when we see that God gives His Word at one place [to one kingdom or realm], but not at another [to another nation]; removes it from one place [people], and allows it to remain at another; also, that one is hardened, blinded, given over to a reprobate mind, while another, who is indeed in the same guilt, is converted again, etc., — in these and similar questions Paul [Rom. 11, 22 ff.] fixes a certain limit to us how far we should go, namely, that in the one part we should recognize God's judgment [for He commands us to consider in those who perish the just judgment of God and the penalties of sins]. For they are well-deserved penalties of sins when God so punishes a land or nation for despising His Word that the punishment extends also to their posterity, as is to be seen in the Jews. And thereby [by the punishments] God in some lands and persons exhibits His severity to those that are His [in order to indicate] what we all would have well deserved, and would be worthy and worth, since we act wickedly in opposition to God's Word [are ungrateful for the revealed Word, and essemus, qui Deo pro revelato Verbo ingrati sumus et indigne evangelio vivimus, Spiritum Sanctum saepe graviter contristamus. Et vult Dominus, ut illorum exemplis moniti in timore Dei vivamus, et ut ipsius bonitatem (quae praeter meritum nobis contingit) in nobis, quos Verbo suo dignatur, neque nos indurat aut reiicit, agnoscamus et grata mente celebremus.

Denn weil unsere Natur durch die Sünde verberbt [ist], Gottes Zorn und der Verdammnis würdig und schuldig, so ist uns Gott weder Wort, Geist oder Gnade schuldig; und wenn er's aus Gnaden gibt, so stoßen wir es oft von uns und machen uns unwürdig des ewigen Lebens, Act. 13. Und solch sein gerechtes, wohlverschuldetes Gericht läßt er schauen an eilichen Völkern, Völkern und Personen, auf daß wir, wenn wir gegen ihnen [gegen sie] gehalten und mit ihnen verglichen [werden], desto fleißiger Gottes lautere, unverbundene Gnade an den Gefäßen der Barmherzigkeit erkennen und preisen lernen.

Denn denen geschieht nicht unrecht, so gestraft werden und ihrer Sünden Sold empfangen; an den andern aber, da Gott sein Wort gibt und erhält, und dadurch die Leute erleuchtet, bekehrt und erhalten werden, preißt Gott seine lautere Gnade und Barmherzigkeit, ohne ihr Verdienst.

Wenn wir so fern in diesem Artikel gehen, so bleiben wir auf der rechten Bahn, wie geschrieben steht Josed 13: „Israel, daß du verdirbst, die Schuld ist dein; daß dir aber geholfen wird, daß ich lauter meine Gnade.“

Was aber in dieser Disputation zu hoch [ist] und aus diesen Schranken laufen will, da sollen wir mit Paulo den Finger auf den Mund legen, denken und sagen: „Wer bist du, Mensch, der du mit Gott rechten willst?“

Denn daß wir in diesem Artikel nicht alles ausforschen und ausgründen können noch sollen, bezeugt der hohe Apostel Paulus, welcher, da er von diesem Artikel aus dem [ge]offenbarten Wort Gottes viel disputiert, sobald er dahin kommt, daß er anzeigt, was Gott von diesem Geheimnis seiner verborgenen Weisheit vorbehalten [habe], brüdt er's nieder und schneidet's ab mit nachfolgenden Worten: „O welch eine Tiefe des Reichthums, beide der Weisheit und Erkenntnis Gottes! Wie gar unbegreiflich sind seine Gerichte und unerforschlich seine Wege! Denn wer hat des Herrn Sinn erkannt?“ nämlich außer und über dem, was er in seinem Wort uns offenbart hat.

Demnach soll diese ewige Wahl Gottes in Christo und nicht außerhalb oder ohne Christum betrachtet werden. Denn „in Christo“, zeugt der heilige Apostel Paulus, „sind wir erwählt, ehe der Welt Grundfeste gelegt war“, wie geschrieben steht: „Er hat uns geliebet in dem Geliebten.“ Solche Wahl aber wird offenbar vom Himmel durch das gepredigte Wort, da der Vater spricht: „Das ist mein lieber Sohn, an dem ich ein Wohlgefallen habe; den sollt ihr hören.“ Und Christus spricht: „Kommet zu mir alle, die ihr beschweret

59] perditissimis hominibus, Iudaeis. Et hoc modo Dominus quarundam provinciarum et personarum poenis severitatem suam ostendit, ut demonstret, quibus nos omnes malis digni

60] Quum enim natura nostra peccato corrupta et idcirco irae divinae et aeternae damnationis rea sit, Deus nobis prorsus nihil debet neque ullo iure tenetur, ut nobis Verbum suum et Spiritum Sanctum largiatur atque gratia et favore nos prosequatur. Quid? quod saepe etiam ea dona, quae ipse nobis ex gratia largitur, repudiamus nosque aeterna vita indignos reddimus, Act. 13, 46. Iustum igitur suum iudicium, quod hominum impietas meretur, conspiciendum in quibusdam regnis, populis, personis proponit, ut, [R. 814] nos cum illis collati et quam simillimi illis deprehensi, tanto accuratius Dei immensam misericordiam (quae nulli merito nostro debetur) in vasis misericordiae agnoscere et celebrare discamus.

61] Illi enim nulla afficiuntur iniuria, qui poenas suae impietatis luunt et scelerum suorum stipendia accipiunt. At in his, quos Deus luce Verbi sui donat eamque apud ipsos conservat, quia miseri mortales illuminantur, convertuntur, salvantur, Dominus immensam suam gratiam et misericordiam sine ipsorum meritis commendat.

62] Cum eo usque in huius articuli meditatione progredimur, tum in tuta et regia via ambulamus. Scriptum est enim de hoc mysterio Osee 13, 9: Perditio tua ex te est, Israel; tantummodo in me auxilium tuum.

63] Quaecunque autem cogitationes et quicunque sermones extra hos limites in hac disputatione evagari volent, eos statim cohibeamus et cum divo Paulo labellum digito compescamus, memores dicti Rom. 9, 20: O homo, tu quis es, qui responses Deo?

64] Et sane, quod in hoc articulo non omnia perscrutari et pervestigare possimus aut debeamus, docet divus Paulus suo ipsius exemplo. Cum enim de hoc articulo multis et Verbo Dei revelato disputasset, tandem cum eo ventum esset, ut diceretur, quoniam Deus arcanae suae sapientiae de hoc mysterio reservasset, silentio ea tegit, disputationem abruptit et his verbis concludit, Rom. 11, 33 sqq.: O altitudo divitiarum sapientiae et scientiae Dei! Quam incomprehensibilia sunt iudicia eius! Quis enim cognovit sensum Domini? etc., scilicet extra et supra id, quod ipse in Verbo suo nobis revelavit.

65] Aeterna igitur Dei praedestinatio in Christo et nequaquam extra mediatorem Christum consideranda est. In Christo enim, inquit Paulus Eph. 1, 4 sqq., elegit nos Deus, antequam mundi fundamenta iacerentur. Et scriptum est, quod Dominus dilexerit [R. 815] nos in Dilecto. Haec autem electio de coelo nobis revelatur per Verbi Dei praedicationem, cum Pater coelestis inquit Matth. 17, 5: Hic est Filius meus dilectus, in quo mihi complacitum est; hunc audite. Et Christus live unworthily of the Gospel] and often grieve the Holy Ghost sorely, in order that we may live in the fear of God, and acknowledge and praise God's goodness, to the exclusion of, and contrary to, our merit in and with us, to whom He gives His Word, and with whom He leaves it, and whom He does not harden and reject.

For inasmuch as our nature has been corrupted by sin, and is worthy of, and subject to, God's wrath and condemnation, God owes to us neither the Word, the Spirit, nor grace; and when He bestows these gifts out of grace, we often thrust them from us, and make ourselves unworthy of everlasting life, Acts 13, 46. And this His righteous, well-deserved judgment He displays in some countries, nations, and persons, in order that, when we are placed alongside of them and compared with them [and found to be most similar to them], we may learn the more diligently to recognize and praise God's pure [immense], unmerited grace in the vessels of mercy.

For no injustice is done those who are punished and receive the wages of their sins; but in the rest, to whom God gives and preserves His Word, by which men are enlightened, converted, and preserved, God commends His pure [immense] grace and mercy, without their merit.

When we proceed thus far in this article, we remain on the right [safe and royal] way, as it is written Hos. 13, 9: O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself; but in Me is thy help.

However, as regards these things in this disputation which would soar too high and beyond these limits, we should, with Paul, place the finger upon our lips, and remember and say, Rom. 9, 20: O man, who art thou that repliest against God?

For that we neither can nor should investigate and fathom everything in this article, the great Apostle Paul declares [teaches by his own example], who, after having argued much concerning this article from the revealed Word of God, as soon as he comes to the point where he shows what God has reserved for His hidden wisdom concerning this mystery, suppresses and cuts it off with the following words, Rom. 11, 33 f.: O the depth of the riches both of the wisdom and knowledge of God! How unsearchable are His judgments, and His ways past finding out! For who hath known the mind of the Lord? that is, outside of and beyond that which He has revealed to us in His Word.

Accordingly, this eternal election of God is to be considered in Christ, and not outside of or without Christ. For in Christ, the Apostle Paul testifies, Eph. 1, 4 f., He hath chosen us before the foundation of the world, as it is written: He hath made us accepted in the Beloved. This election, however, is revealed from heaven through the preaching of His Word, when the Father says, Matt. 17, 5: This is My beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye Him. And Christ says, Matt. 11, 28: Come unto Me, all ye that labor seid; ich will euch erquiden." Und vom Heiligen Geist sagt Christus: „Er wird mich verkünden und euch erinnern alles, was ich euch gesagt habe." Daß also die ganze heilige Dreifaltigkeit, Gott Vater, Sohn und Heiliger Geist, alle Menschen auf Christum weisen als auf das Buch des Lebens, in dem sie des Vaters ewige Wahl suchen sollen. Denn das ist von Ewigkeit bei dem Vater beschlossen: wen er wolle selig machen, den wolle er durch Christum selig machen, wie er selber spricht: „Niemand kommt zum Vater denn durch mich"; und abermals: „Ich bin die Tür; so jemand durch mich eingetretet, der wird selig werden." Eph. 1; Luf. 3; Matth. 11; Joh. 16. 14. 10.

Christus aber, als der eingeborne Sohn Gottes, der in des Vaters Schoß ist, hat uns des Vaters Willen und also auch unsere ewige Wahl zum ewigen Leben verkündigt, nämlich da er sagt: „Ihr Buße und glaubet dem Evangelio; denn das Reich Gottes ist nahe herbeikommen." Item, er sagt: „Das ist der Wille des, der mich gesandt hat, daß, wer den Sohn siehet und glaubet an ihn, habe das ewige Leben." Und abermals: „Also hat Gott die Welt geliebet" usw. Mark. 1; Joh. 6. 3.

Diese Predigt, will der Vater, daß alle Menschen hören und zu Christo kommen sollen, die auch Christus nicht von sich treibt, wie geschrieben steht: „Wer zu mir kommt, den werde ich nicht hinausstoßen", Joh. 6.

Und auf daß wir zu Christo mögen kommen, wirkt der Heilige Geist durch das Gehör des Wortes den wahrhaftigen Glauben, wie der Apostel zeugt, da er spricht: „So kommt nun der Glaube aus dem Gehör Gottes Wort", wenn dasselbe lauter und rein gepredigt wird, Röm. 10.

Derhalben, welcher Mensch selig werden will, der soll sich selber nicht bemühen oder plagen mit den Gedanken von dem heimlichen Rat Gottes, ob er auch zum ewigen Leben erwählt und berordnet sei, damit der leidige Satan fromme Herzen pflegt anzuseuchen und zu verzieren. Sondern sie sollen Christum hören, welcher ist das Buch des Lebens und der ewigen Wahl Gottes zum ewigen Leben aller Kinder Gottes; der bezeugt allen Menschen ohne Unterschied, daß Gott wolle, daß alle Menschen zu ihm kommen, die mit Sünden beschwert und beladen sind, auf daß sie erquidet und selig werden.

Nach dieser seiner Lehre sollen sie von ihren Sünden absteigen, Buße tun, seiner Verheißung glauben und sich ganz und gar auf ihn verlassen; und weil wir das aus eigenen Kräften von uns selbst nicht vermögen, will solches, nämlich Buße und Glauben, der Heilige Geist in uns wirken durchs Wort und durch die Sacramente. Und daß wir solches mögen vollführen, darin verharren und beständig bleiben, sollen wir Gott um seine Gnade anrufen, die er uns in der heiligen Taufe zugesagt hat, und nicht zweifeln, er werde uns dieselbe vermöge seiner Verheißung mittheilen; wie er versprochen hat Luf. 11: „Wo bittet unter euch ein Sohn den Vater um Brot, der ihm einen dicat Matth. 11, 28: Venite ad me omnes, qui laboratis et onerati estis, et ego reficiam vos. De Spiritu Sancto vero Christus inquit Ioh. 16, 14: Ille me clarificabit, quia de meo accipiet et annuntiabit vobis etc. Itaque tota sacratissima Trinitas, Pater, Filius et Spiritus Sanctus, ablegat omnes homines ad Christum tamquam ad librum vitae, ut in eo aeternam Patris praedestinationem investigent et cognoscant. Hoc enim iam ab aeterno decretum est a Patre, quod eos, quos salvare vult, per Christum salvos facere velit, ut Christus ipse inquit Ioh. 14, 6: Nemo venit ad Patrem nisi per me; et alibi, 10, 9: Ego sum ostium; si quis per me introierit, salvabitur.

67) Christus autem, unigenitus Dei Filius, qui est in sinu Patris, Ioh. 1, 18, nobis voluntatem Patris coelestis, atque hac ratione etiam electionem nostram ad vitam aeternam annuntiavit, idque his verbis Marc. 1, 15: Poenitentiam agite et credite evangelio; appropinquavit enim regnum coelorum. Et alio loco, Ioh. 6, 40, ait: Haec est voluntas eius, qui misit me, [ut,] qui Filium videt et credit in eum, habeat vitam aeternam. Et alibi, Ioh. 3, 16: Sic Deus dilexit mundum, ut Filium suum unigenitum daret, ut omnis, qui in eum crediderit, non pereat, sed habeat vitam aeternam etc.

68) Hanc dulcissimam concionem vult Deus Pater, ut omnes homines audiant, vult, ut ad Christum veniant. Qui vero venerint, eos Christus non a se repellit. Sic enim scriptum est Ioh. 6, 37: Quod venerit ad me, non eiciam foras.

69) Ut autem ad Christum venire possimus, Spiritus Sanctus per auditionem Verbi Dei veram in nobis fidem operatur. Sic [R. 816 enim apostolus ait Rom. 10, 17: Fides est ex auditu Verbi Dei, quando videlicet illud sincere et pure annuntiat.

70) Qui igitur aeternae salutis vero desiderio tenentur, non macerant atque excruciant sese cogitationibus et imaginationibus de arcano Dei consilio, an ad vitam aeternam sint praedestinati et ordinati, quibus curis Satanias pias mentes quandoque affligere atque excruciare solet. Christum potius audiant et in eum ut in librum vitae intueantur, in quo per scripta est omnium filiorum Dei electio ad vitam aeternam. Hic vero omnibus hominibus absque ullo discrimine testis locupletissimus est, hanc esse Dei voluntatem, ut omnes homines ad Christum veniant, qui peccatis gravati et onerati sunt, ut ab ipso recreentur et salvi fiant [Matth. 11, 28].

71) Hac doctrina Christi percepta vitam emendemus et vere poenitentiam agamus et promissioni eius credamus totamque nostram in ipsum fiduciam colloquamus. Quia vero haec nostris viribus et ex nobis ipsis praestare non possumus, Spiritus Sanctus ipse per Verbum et sacramenta in nobis poenitentiam et fidem 72) vult operari. Ut autem in bono isto proposito usque ad beatum finem progredi, perseverare atque in vera pietate constantes manere valeamus, invocandum est Deus ardentibus votis, ut gratiam nobis suam benigne largiatur, quam nobis in sacro baptismo pollicitus est, nec dubitemus, quin eam sit iuxta promiss-and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. And concerning the Holy Ghost Christ says, John 16, 14: He shall glorify Me; for He shall receive of Mine, and shall show it unto you. Thus the entire Holy Trinity, God Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, directs all men to Christ, as to the Book of Life, in whom they should seek the eternal election of the Father. For this has been decided by the Father from eternity, that whom He would save He would save through Christ, as He [Christ] Himself says, John 14, 6: No man cometh unto the Father but by Me. And again, John 10, 9: I am the Door; by Me, if any man enter in, he shall be saved.

However, Christ, as the only-begotten Son of God, who is in the bosom of the Father, has announced to us the will of the Father, and thus also our eternal election to eternal life, namely, when He says, Mark 1, 15: Repent ye, and believe the Gospel; the kingdom of God is at hand. Likewise He says, John 6, 40: This is the will of Him that sent Me, that every one which seeth the Son and believeth on Him may have everlasting life. And again [John 3, 16]: God so loved the world, etc. [that He gave His only-begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish, but have everlasting life].

This proclamation the Father wishes all men to hear and desires that they come to Christ; and these Christ does not drive from Him, as it is written John 6, 37: Him that cometh to Me I will in no wise cast out.

And in order that we may come to Christ, the Holy Ghost works true faith through the hearing of the Word, as the apostle testifies when he says, Rom. 10, 17: Faith cometh by hearing and hearing by the Word of God, [namely] when it is preached in its truth and purity.

Therefore, whoever would be saved should not trouble or harass himself with thoughts concerning the secret counsel of God, as to whether he also is elected and ordained to eternal life, with which miserable Satan usually attacks and annoys godly hearts. But they should hear Christ [and look upon Him as the Book of Life in which is written the eternal election], who is the Book of Life and of God's eternal election of all of God's children to eternal life: He testifies to all men without distinction that it is God's will that all men should come to Him who labor and are heavy laden with sin, in order that He may give them rest and save them, Matt. 11, 28.

According to this doctrine of His they should abstain from their sins, repent, believe His promise, and entirely trust in Him; and since we cannot do this by ourselves, of our own powers, the Holy Ghost desires to work these things, namely, repentance and faith, in us through the Word and Sacraments. And in order that we may attain this, persevere in it, and remain steadfast, we should implore God for His grace, which He has promised us in Holy Baptism, and, no doubt, He will impart it to us according to His promise, as He has Stein dafür biete; [und so er um einen Fisch bittet, der ihm eine Schlange für den Fisch biete;] oder so er um ein Ei bittet, der ihm einen Skorpion dafür biete? So denn ihr, die ihr arg seid, können euren Kindern Gutes geben, viel mehr wird der Vater im Himmel den Heiligen Geist geben denen, die ihn bitten."

Und nachdem der Heilige Geist in den Ausgewählten, die gläubig [ge]worden sind, wohnt als in seinem Tempel, der in ihnen nicht müßig ist, sondern treibt die Kinder Gottes zum Gehorsam der Gebote Gottes, sollen die Gläubigen gleichgestalt auch nicht müßig sein, noch viel weniger dem Treiben des Geistes Gottes sich widersetzen, sondern in allen christlichen Tugenden, in aller Gottseligkeit, Bescheidenheit, Mäßigkeit, Geduld, brüderlicher Liebe sich üben und allen Fleiß tun, daß sie ihren Beruf und Erwählung festmachen, damit sie desto weniger daran zweifeln, je mehr sie des Geistes Kraft und Stärke in ihnen [in sich] selbst befinden. Denn der Geist Gottes den Ausgewählten Zeugnis gibt, daß sie Gottes Kinder sind, Röm. 8. Und ob sie gleich etwan [bistweilen] in so tiefe Anfechtung geraten, daß sie vermeinen, sie empfinden keine Kraft des inwohnenden Geistes Gottes mehr, und sagen mit David Ps. 31: „Ich sprach in meinem Zagen: Ich bin von deinen Augen verstoßen“, so sollen sie doch wiederum mit David darauf sagen, unangesehen, was sie in ihnen selbst befinden, wie denn gleich folgt, ibidem: „Dennoch hörest [hörtest] du meines Flehens Stimme, da ich zu dir schrie.“

Und weil unjere Wahl zum ewigen Leben nicht auf unserer Frömmigkeit oder Tugend, sondern allein auf Christus' Verdienst und [den] gnädigen Willen seines Vaters gegründet ist, der sich selbst nicht verleugnen kann, weil er in seinem Willen und Wesen unwandelbar ist: derhalben, wenn seine Kinder aus dem Gehorsam treten und straucheln, läßt er sie durchs Wort wieder zur Buße rufen, und will der Heilige Geist dadurch in ihnen zur Belehrung kräftig sein; und wenn sie in wahrer Buße durch rechten Glauben sich wieder zu ihm bekehren, will er das alte Vaterherz immer erzeigen allen denen, die sich ob [die sich vor] seinem Wort fürchten und von Herzen wieder zu ihm bekehren; wie geschrieben steht Jer. 3: „Wenn sich ein Mann von seinem Weibe scheiden läßt, und sie zeucht [zieht] von ihm und nimmt einen andern Mann, darf er sie auch wieder annehmen? Ist's nicht also, daß das Land verunreinigt würde? Du aber hast mit viel Buhlern gehuret; doch komm wieder zu mir, spricht der Herr.“

Daß aber gesagt wird Joh. 6, „niemand komme zu Christo, der Vater ziehe ihn denn“, ist recht und wahr. Aber der Vater will das nicht tun ohne Mittel, sondern hat dazu sein Wort und Sakramente als ordentliche Mittel und Werkzeuge verordnet; und [es] ist weder des Vaters noch des Sohnes Wille, daß ein Mensch die Predigt seines Wortes nicht hören oder verachten und auf das Ziehen des Vaters ohne Wort und Sakramente warten solle. Denn der Vater zeucht [zieht] wohl mit der Kraft seines Heiligen Geistes, jedoch, seisionem suam nobis donaturus. Hoc enim Christus nobis ipse sancte promisit, dicens Luc. 11, 11 sqq.: Quis autem ex vobis patrem petit panem, numquid lapidem dabit illi; aut piscem, numquid pro pisce serpentem dabit illi; aut si petierit ovum, numquid porriget illi scorpionem? Si ergo vos, cum sitis mali, nostis bona dona dare filiis vestris, quanto magis Pater vester coelestis dabit Spiritum bonum petentibus se?

73] Et quia Spiritus Sanctus in electis, qui iam in Christum credunt, habitat [R. 817 (1 Cor. 3, 16)] ut in templo suo et in ipsis non est otiosus, sed impellit filios Dei ad obedientiam mandatis Dei praestandam, ipsos etiam credentes non otiosos esse, multo vero minus agenti et operanti Spiritui Sancto resistere decet. Exerceant igitur sese in omnibus virtutibus, homine Christiano dignis, in omni videlicet pietate, modestia, temperantia, patientia et caritate fraterna, magnamque diligentiam adhibeant, ut vocationem et electionem suam firmam faciant, ut tanto minus de ea dubitent, quanto efficacius Spiritus Sancti vir- 74] tutem et robur in se sentiunt. Spiritus Dei enim testimonium perhibet electis, quod sint filii Dei, Rom. 8, 16. Quodsi etiam aliquando in tam graves tentationes inciderint, ut prorsus nullam amplius inhabitantis Spiritus Dei virtutem in se animadvertere et sentire possint, ut cum Davide queribunda voce dicant, Ps. 31, 23: Ego dixi in excessu mentis meae: Proiectus sum a facie oculorum tuorum, tamen rursum se erigant et illud cum Davide adiciant (utcumque aliud in se sentiant): Ideo exaudisti vocem orationis meae, dum clamarem ad te.

75] Cum etiam electio nostra ad vitam aeternam non virtutibus aut iustitia nostra, sed solo Christi merito et benigna coelestis Patris voluntate nitatur, qui se ipsum negare non potest (cum in voluntate et essentia sua sit immutabilis): eam ob causam, quando filii ipsius obedientiam non praestant, sed in peccata labuntur, per Verbum eos ad poenitentiam revocat, et Spiritus Sanctus per Verbum vult in iis efficax esse, ut in viam redeant et vitam emendent. Quando igitur vera poenitentia et fide rursus ad ipsum sese convertunt, Pater coelestis animum suum paternum constanter omnibus suis ostendere vult, qui ad Verbum eius tremunt et serio respiciunt. Sic enim scriptum est Ier. 3, 1: Si dimiserit vir uxorem suam, et recedens ab eo, viro alteri nupserit, numquid revertetur ad eum [R. 818] ultra? Numquid non ipsa terra sic contaminaretur? Tu autem fornicata es cum amatoribus multis; tamen revertere ad me, dicit Dominus.

76] Quod vero in sacris litteris, Ioh. 6, 44, asseritur, neminem ad Christum venire posse, nisi Pater eum trahat, id pie et recte dicitur. Pater autem neminem trahere vult absque mediis; sed utitur tamquam ordinariis mediis et instrumentis, Verbo suo et sacramentis. Et neque Patris neque Filii voluntas est, ut quisquam praedicationem Verbi negligat aut contemnat et interim expectet, donec a Patre absque Verbo et sacramento trahatur. Pater enim trahit quidem hominem virtute Spiritus said, Luke 11, 11 ff.: If a son shall ask bread of any of you that is a father, will he give him a stone? Or if he ask a fish, will he for a fish give him a serpent? Or if he shall ask an egg, will he offer him a scorpion? If ye, then, being evil, know how to give good gifts unto your children, how much more shall your heavenly Father give the Holy Spirit to them that ask Him!

And since the Holy Ghost dwells in the elect, who have become believers, as in His temple, and is not idle in them, but impels the children of God to obedience to God's commands, believers, likewise, should not be idle, and much less resist the impulse of God's Spirit, but should exercise themselves in all Christian virtues, in all godliness, modesty, temperance, patience, brotherly love, and give all diligence to make their calling and election sure, in order that they may doubt the less concerning it, the more they experience the power and strength of the Spirit within them. For the Spirit bears witness to the elect that they are God's children, Rom. 8, 16. And although they sometimes fall into temptation so grievous that they imagine they perceive no more power of the indwelling Spirit of God, and say with David, Ps. 31, 22: I said in my haste, I am cut off from before Thine eyes, yet they should, without regard to what they experience in themselves, again [be encouraged and] say with David, as is written ibidem, in the words immediately following: Nevertheless Thou heardest the voice of my supplications when I cried unto Thee.

And since our election to eternal life is founded not upon our godliness or virtue, but alone upon the merit of Christ and the gracious will of His Father, who cannot deny Himself, because He is unchangeable in will and essence, therefore, when His children depart from obedience and stumble, He has them called again to repentance through the Word, and the Holy Ghost wishes thereby to be efficacious in them for conversion; and when they turn to Him again in true repentance by a right faith, He will always manifest the old paternal heart to all those who tremble at His Word and from their heart turn again to Him, as it is written, Jer. 3, 1: If a man put away his wife, and she go from him and become another man's, shall he return unto her again? Shall not that land be greatly polluted? But thou hast played the harlot with many lovers; yet return again to Me, saith the Lord.

Moreover, the declaration, John 6, 44, that no one can come to Christ except the Father draw him, is right and true. However, the Father will not do this without means, but has ordained for this purpose His Word and Sacraments as ordinary means and instruments; and it is the will neither of the Father nor of the Son that a man should not hear or should despise the preaching of His Word, and wait for the drawing of the Father without the Word and Sacraments. For the Father draws indeed by the power of His Holy Ghost, ner gemeinen Ordnung nach, durch das Gehör seines heiligen göttlichen Wortes als mit einem Reize, dadurch die Auserwählten aus dem Rachen des Teufels gerissen werden, dazu sich ein jeder armer Sünder verfügen, dasselbe mit Fleiß hören und an dem Ziehen des Vaters nicht zweifeln soll; denn der Heilige Geist will mit seiner Kraft bei dem Wort sein und dadurch wirken; und daß ist das Ziehen des Vaters.

Daß aber nicht alle die, so es gehört, glauben und deshalb so viel desto tiefer verdammt werden, [davon] ist nicht die Ursache, daß ihnen Gott die Seligkeit nicht gegönnt hätte, sondern sie selbst sind schuldig [schuldig] dran, die solchergestalt das Wort gehört [haben], nicht zu lernen, sondern dasselbe allein zu verachten, zu lästern und zu schänden, und daß sie dem Heiligen Geist, der durchs Wort in ihnen wirken wollte, widerstrebt haben, wie es eine Gestalt [Bewandtnis] zur Zeit Christi mit den Pharisäern und ihrem Anhang gehabt. So unterscheidet der Apostel mit [besonderem] Fleiß das Werk Gottes, der allein Gefäße der Ehre macht, und das Werk des Teufels und des Menschen, der sich selbst aus Eingebung des Teufels, und nicht Gottes, zum Gefäß der Unehre gemacht hat. Denn also steht geschrieben Röm. 9: „Gott hat mit großer Geduld getragen die Gefäße des Zorns, die da zugerichtet sind zur Verdamnis, auf daß er kundtäte den Reichtum seiner Herrlichkeit an den Gefäßen der Barmherzigkeit, die er bereitet hat zur Seligkeit.“

Da denn der Apostel deutlich sagt, Gott habe die Gefäße des Zorns mit großer Geduld getragen, und sagt nicht, er habe sie zu Gefäßen des Zorns gemacht; denn da es sein Wille gewesen wäre, hätte er seiner großen Geduld dazu bedürft [bedürft]. Daß sie aber bereitet sind zur Verdamnis, daran sind der Teufel und die Menschen selbst, und nicht Gott, schuldig.

Denn alle Vereitung zur Verdamnis ist vom Teufel und Menschen, durch die Sünde, und ganz und gar nicht von Gott, der nicht will, daß ein Mensch verdammt werde: wie sollte er denn einen Menschen zur Verdamnis selbst bereiten? Denn wie Gott nicht ist eine Ursache der Sünde, also ist er auch keine Ursache der Strafe, der Verdamnis, sondern die einige [die alleinige] Ursache der Verdamnis ist die Sünde; denn „der Sünde Sold ist der Tod“. Und wie Gott die Sünde nicht will, auch keinen Gefallen an der Sünde hat, also will er auch nicht den Tod des Sünders, hat auch keinen Gefallen über ihrer [an ihrer] Verdamnis; denn er „will nicht, daß jemand verloren werde, sondern daß sich jedermann zur Buße bekehre“, 2 Petr. 3; wie geschrieben steht Ezech. 18 und 33: „Ich habe keinen Gefallen am Tode des Sterbenden. So wahr, als ich lebe, will ich nicht den Tod des Sünders, sondern daß er sich bekehre und lebe.“ Und St. Paulus bezeugt mit lauterem [mit klaren] Worten, daß aus den Gefäßen der Unehre Gefäße der Ehre durch Gottes Kraft und Wirkung werden mögen, da er also schreibt 2 Tim. 2: „So nun jemand sich reiniget von solchen Leuten, der wird ein geheiliget Faß sein, zu Ehren, dem Hausherrn bräulich, und zu allen guten Werken bereitet.“ Denn wer sich reinigen soll, der muß zuvor unrein und demnach ein Ge-sui Sancti, trahit tamen eum iuxta ordinem a se decretum et institutum, videlicet per auditionem Verbi sui divini, tamquam reti aut sagena, qua electi e faucibus Satanae 77) eripiuntur. Ad conciones itaque sacras miseri peccatores convenient, Verbum Dei accurata diligentia audiant neque dubitent, quin Pater eos ad Filium suum Christum sit pertracturus. Spiritus enim Sanctus virtute sua ministerio adesse et per illud ad hominum salutem vult operari. Et hic est tractus ille Patris, de quo sacrae litterae loquuntur.

80) His verbis Paulus disertè dicit, Deum vasa irae multa patientia sustinuisse, non autem dicit, Deum fecisse vasa irae. Si enim haec ipsius fuisset voluntas, non multa certe opus erat divina patientia. Quod autem aptata sunt ad interitum, in culpa sunt diabolus et homines, nullo autem modo Deus.

81) Omnis enim praeparatio seu aptatio ad interitum a diabolo est et ab homine, per peccatum, nequaquam autem a Deo. Deus enim non vult, ut homo ullus damnetur: quomodo igitur hominem ad damnationem ipse praepararet seu aptaret? Ut enim Deus non est causa peccati, ita etiam non est poenae, hoc est, damnationis, sed unica causa damnationis est peccatum. Stipendium enim peccati mors est, Rom. 6, 23. Et ut Deus non vult peccatum nec peccato delectatur, ita etiam non vult mortem peccatoris, Ezech. 33, 11, neque ipsius damnatione delectatur. Non enim vult Deus quemquam perire, sed potius, ut omnes poenitentiam agant, 2 Petr. 3, 9. Sic enim scriptum est in Ezechiele, 18, 23; 33, 11: Vivo ego, dicit Dominus, nolo mortem peccatoris, sed ut convertatur et vivat. Et Paulus disertis verbis testatur, quod ex vasis ignominiae vasa in honorem (per virtutem et operationem Dei) fieri possint. Sic enim scribit 2 Tim. 2, 21: Si quis emundaverit se ab istis, erit vas in honorem, sanctificatum et utile Domino, ad omne opus bonum paratum. Qui autem se emundare debet, eum necesse est prius fuisse immundum, impurum et per consequens vas ignominiae. De vasis autem misericordiae apostolus clare dicit, quod Dominus ipse however, according to His usual order [the order decreed and instituted by Himself], by the hearing of His holy, divine Word, as with a net, by which the elect are plucked from the jaws of the devil. Every poor sinner should therefore repair thereto [to holy preaching], hear it attentively, and not doubt the drawing of the Father. For the Holy Ghost will be with His Word in His power, and work by it; and that is the drawing of the Father.

But the reason why not all who hear it believe, and some are therefore condemned the more deeply [eternally to severer punishments], is not because God had begrudged them their salvation; but it is their own fault, as they have heard the Word in such a manner as not to learn, but only to despise, blaspheme, and disgrace it, and have resisted the Holy Ghost, who through the Word wished to work in them, as was the case at the time of Christ with the Pharisees and their adherents. Hence the apostle distinguishes with especial care the work of God, who alone makes vessels of honor, and the work of the devil and of man, who by the instigation of the devil, and not of God, has made himself a vessel of dishonor. For thus it is written, Rom. 9, 22 f.: God endured with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath fitted to destruction, that He might make known the riches of His glory on the vessels of mercy, which He had afore prepared unto glory.

Here, then, the apostle clearly says that God endured with much long-suffering the vessels of wrath, but does not say that He made them vessels of wrath; for if this had been His will, He would not have required any great long-suffering for it. The fault, however, that they are fitted for destruction belongs to the devil and to men themselves, and not to God.

For all preparation for condemnation is by the devil and man, through sin, and in no respect by God, who does not wish that any man be damned; how, then, should He Himself prepare any man for condemnation? For as God is not a cause of sins, so, too, He is no cause of punishment, of damnation; but the only cause of damnation is sin; for the wages of sin is death, Rom. 6, 23. And as God does not will sin, and has no pleasure in sin, so He does not wish the death of the sinner either, Ezek. 33, 11, nor has He pleasure in his condemnation. For He is not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance, 2 Pet. 3, 9. So, too, it is written in Ezek. 18, 23; 33, 11: As I live, saith the Lord God, I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live. And St. Paul testifies in clear words that from vessels of dishonor vessels of honor may be made by God's power and working, when he writes thus, 2 Tim. 2, 21: If a man, therefore, purge himself from these, he shall be a vessel unto honor, sanctified and meet for the Master's use, and prepared unto every good work. For he who is to purge himself must first have been unfäß der Unehre gewesen seyn. Aber von den Gefäßen der Barmherzigkeit sagt er klar, daß der Herr selbst sie bereitet habe zur Herrlichkeit, welches er nicht sagt von den Verdammten, die sich selbst (und nicht Gott) zu Gefäßen der Verdammnis bereitet haben.

Es ist auch mit Fleiß zu bedenken: wenn Gott Sünde mit Sünden, das ist, diejenigen, so befehrt gewesen, von wegen folgender ihrer Sicherheit, Unbussfertigkeit und mutwilligen Sünden, hernach mit Verstockung und Verblendung straft, daß solches nicht dahin gezogen werden solle, als wäre es Gottes wohlgefälliger Wille niemals gewesen, daß solche Leute zur Erkenntnis der Wahrheit kommen [sollten] und selig würden. Denn es ist bei des Gottes offenkundiger Wille:

Erstlich, daß Gott alle, so Buße thun und an Christum glauben, zu Gnaden aufnehmen wolle.

Zum andern, daß er auch die, so sich mutwillig von dem heiligen Gebot abwenden und in den Unflath der Welt wieder einfließen, 2 Petr. 2, dem Satan das Herz schmüden, Luc. 11, den Heiligen Geist schänden, Hebr. 10, strafen wolle, und da sie drin verharren, daß sie verstockt, verblendet und ewig verdammt sollen werden.

Demnach auch Pharaos (von dem geschrieben steht: „Eben darum habe ich dich erwecket, daß meine Kraft an dir erscheine und mein Name verkündigt würde in allen Landen“) nicht darum zugrund [ge]gangen, daß Gott ihm die Seligkeit nicht gegönnt haben sollte, oder sein wohlgefälliger Wille gewesen wäre, daß er sollte verdammt und verloren werden; denn Gott will nicht, daß jemand verloren werde, hat auch keinen Gefallen am Tode des Sünders, sondern will, daß er sich bekehre und lebe, Ezech. 33.

Daß aber Gott Pharaos Herz verhärtet, daß nämlich Pharaos immer fort und fort sündigt, und je mehr er vermahn[t] [wird], je verstockter er wird, daß ist eine Strafe seiner vorgehenden Sünde und gereulichen Thrannei gewesen, die er an den Kindern Israel viel und mancherlei, ganz unmenshlich und wider das Ansehen seines Herzens geübt hat. Und weil ihm Gott sein Wort predigen und seinen Willen verkündigen ließ, und aber [und dennoch] Pharaos sich mutwillig stracks wider alle Vermahnung und Warnung auflehnte, hat Gott die Hand von ihm abgezogen, und ist also das Herz verhärtet und verstockt [worden], und hat Gott sein Gericht an ihm gezeigt; denn er anders nichts denn des höllischen Feuers schuldig war. Wie denn der heilige Apostel das Exempel Pharaos auch anders nicht einführt, denn hiermit die Gerechtigkeit Gottes zu erweisen, die er über die Unbussfertigen und Verächter seines Wortes erzeigt, keineswegs aber dahin gemeint noch verstanden [hat], daß Gott ihm oder einigem Menschen die Seligkeit nicht gönnte, sondern [ihn] also in seinem heimlichen Rath zur ewigen Verdammnis verordnet [hätte], daß er nicht sollte können oder mögen selig werden.

Durch diese Lehre und Erklärung von der ewigen und seligmachenden Wahl der auserwählten Kinder Gottes wird Gott seine Ehre ganz und völlig gegeben, daß er aus lauter Barmherzig-praeparaverit ea ad gloriam, id quod nequam affirmat de damnatis, qui ipsi (non autem Deus) sese vasa damnationis fecerunt.

83] Sed et hoc magna cura considerandum est, quando Dominus peccata peccatis [R. 820] punit, hoc est, cum eos, qui aliquando conversi fuerant, propter subsequentem securitatem carnalem, impenitentiam, contumaciam in sceleribus et propter voluntaria flagitia punit excaecatione et induratione, id non ita accipiendum esse, quasi Deus nunquam serio voluisset, ut tales ad agnitionem veritatis pervenirent et salutem consequerentur. Ut enim haec voluntas Dei revelata est:

I. Quod Deus omnes respiciens et in Christum credentes in gratiam recipere velit. Ita et haec est Dei revelata voluntas, II. Quod eos, qui sponte sese a sancto Dei mandato avertunt, in coinquisitiones mundi se denuo implicant, 2 Petr. 2, 20, et Satanae oer adornant, Luc. 11, 25 sq., Spiritumque gratiae contumelia afficiunt, Hebr. 10, 29, severissime punire velit, et quod tales, si in impietate perseveraverint, indurandi, excaecandi et in aeternum damnandi sint.

84] Itaque Pharaos (de quo scriptum est Exod. 9, 16; Rom. 9, 17: In hoc ipsum excoitavi te, ut ostendam in te virtutem meam, et ut annuntiatur nomen meum in universa terra) non ideo perit, quod Deus illi salutem invideret, aut quasi Deus ipsis damnatione et interitu delectaretur. Deus enim non vult quemquam perire [2 Pet. 3, 9]; neque morte peccatoris delectatur; sed vult, ut convertatur et vivat Ezech. 33, 11.

85] Quod autem Dominus cor Pharaonis indurat, ut Pharaos subinde peccando pergat, et quo gravius admonetur, eo magis ipse induretur, id poena est antecedentium ipsius peccatorum et immanissimae et multiplicis tyrannidis, quam in filios Israel (contra conscientiae suae stimulos) exercuerat. Et cum Dominus ipsi Verbum ac voluntatem suam annuntiari curaret, Pharaos vero nihilominus ex proposito et destinata malitia simpliciter adversus omnes exhortationes et admonitiones contumaciter insurgeret, Dominus manum ab eo suam retraxit, eum deseruit, atque [R. 821] ita cor ipsius induratum est, et Dominus iustum iudicium suum adversus eum executus est. Omnino enim Pharaos aeterno gehennae incendio dignus erat. Et sane divus Paulus exemplum Pharaonis non alio fine affert, quam ut eo ipso Dei iustitiam declararet, quam in impenitentibus hominibus et Verbi divini contemptoribus puniendis demonstrat. Nequaquam autem Pauli mens est, quod Dominus Pharaoni aut ulli alii homini salutem invidet, aut quod in arcano suo consilio quemquam ad damnationem praedestina-verit, ut ille nullo modo salutem consequi possit.

87] Hac pia doctrina et declaratione articuli de aeterna et salvifica electorum filiorum Dei praedestinatione Deo gloria sua omnis solide tribuitur, quod videlicet mera et gra-clean, and hence a vessel of dishonor. But concerning the vessels of mercy he says clearly that the Lord Himself has prepared them for glory, which he does not say concerning the damned, who themselves, and not God, have prepared themselves as vessels of damnation.

Moreover, it is to be diligently considered that when God punishes sin with sins, that is, when He afterwards punishes with obduracy and blindness those who had been converted, because of their subsequent security, impenitence, and wilful sins, this should not be interpreted to mean that it never had been God's good pleasure that such persons should come to the knowledge of the truth and be saved. For both these facts are God's revealed will:

First, that God will receive into grace all who repent and believe in Christ.

Secondly, that He also will punish those who wilfully turn away from the holy commandment, and again entangle themselves in the filth of the world, 2 Pet. 2, 20, and garnish their hearts for Satan, Luke 11, 25 f., and do despite unto the Spirit of God, Heb. 10, 29, and that they shall be hardened, blinded, and eternally condemned if they persist therein.

Accordingly, even Pharaoh (of whom it is written, Ex. 9, 16; Rom. 9, 17: In very deed for this cause have I raised thee up, for to show in thee My power, and that My name may be declared throughout all the earth) perished, not because God had begrudged him salvation, or because it had been His good pleasure that he should be damned and lost. For God is not willing that any should perish, 2 Pet. 3, 9; He also has no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but that the wicked turn from his way and live, Ezek. 33, 11.

But that God hardened Pharaoh's heart, namely, that Pharaoh always sinned again and again, and became the more obdurate, the more he was admonished, that was a punishment of his antecedent sin and horrible tyranny, which in many and manifold ways he practised inhumanly and against the accusations of his heart towards the children of Israel. And since God caused His Word to be preached and His will to be proclaimed to him, and Pharaoh nevertheless wilfully reared up straightway against all admonitions and warnings, God withdrew His hand from him, and thus his heart became hardened and obdurate, and God executed His judgment upon him; for he was guilty of nothing else than hell-fire. Accordingly, the holy apostle also introduces the example of Pharaoh for no other reason than to prove by it the justice of God which He exercises towards the impenitent and despisers of His Word; by no means, however, has he intended or understood it to mean that God begrudged salvation to him or any person, but had so ordained him to eternal damnation in His secret counsel that he should not be able, or that it should not be possible for him, to be saved.

By this doctrine and explanation of the eternal and saving choice [predestination] of the elect children of God His own glory is entirely and fully given to God, that in Christ leit in Christo, ohne alle unser Verdienst oder gute Werke uns selig mache, nach dem Voratz seines Willens, wie geschrieben steht Eph. 1: „Er hat uns berordnet zur Kindtschaft gegen ihn selbst durch Jesum Christum nach dem Wohlgefallen seines Willens, zu Lob seiner Herrlichkeit und Gnade, durch welche er uns hat angenehm gemacht in dem Geliebten.“ Darum es falsch und unrecht, wenn gelehrt wird, daß nicht allein die Barmherzigkeit Gottes und [das] allerheiligste Verdienst Christi, sondern auch in uns eine Ursache der Wahl Gottes sei, um welcher willen Gott uns zum ewigen Leben erwählt habe. Denn nicht allein, ehe wir etwas Gutes getan, sondern auch, ehe wir geboren werden, hat er uns in Christo erwählt, ja, ehe der Welt Grund gelegt war, und „auf daß der Voratz Gottes bestünde nach der Wahl, ward zu ihm gesagt, nicht aus Verdienst der Werke, sondern aus Gnaden des Verusers, also: Der Größte soll dienstbar werden dem Kleineren“. Wie denn geschrieben steht: „Ich habe Jakob geliebet, aber Esau habe ich gehasset“, Röm. 9; Gen. 25; Mal. 1.

Desgleichen gibt diese Lehre niemand Ursache weder zur Kleinmütigkeit noch zu einem frechen, wilden Leben, wenn die Leute gelehrt werden, daß sie die ewige Wahl in Christo und seinem heiligen Evangelio, als in dem Buch des Lebens, suchen sollen, welches keinen bußfertigen Sünder ausschleut [ausschließt], sondern zur Ruhe und Erkenntnis ihrer Sünden und zum Glauben an Christum alle armen, beschwerten und betrübten Sünder lockt und ruft und den Heiligen Geist zur Reinigung und Erneuerung verheißt und also den allerbeständigen Trost den betrübten, angefochtenen Menschen gibt, daß sie wissen, daß ihre Seligkeit nicht in ihrer Hand stehe (sonst würden sie dieselbe viel leichtlicher, als Adam und Eva im Paradies geschehen, ja alle Stunden und Augenblicke verlieren), sondern in der gnädigen Wahl Gottes, die er uns in Christo offenbart hat, aus des Hand uns niemand reißen wird, Joh. 10; 2 Tim. 2.

Demnach, welcher die Lehre von der gnädigen Wahl Gottes also führt, daß sich die betrübten Christen derselben nicht trösten können, sondern dadurch zur Verzweiflung verursacht [werden], oder die Unbußfertigen in ihrem Rutwillen gestärkt werden, so ist ungewiselt gewiß und wahr, daß dieselbe Lehre nicht nach dem Wort und Willen Gottes, sondern nach der Vernunft und Anstiftung des leidigen Teufels getrieben werde.

Denn, wie der Apostel zeugt Röm. 15, „alles, was geschrieben ist, das ist uns zur Lehre geschrieben, auf daß wir durch Geduld und Trost der Schrift Hoffnung haben“. Da uns aber durch die Schrift [wenn uns aber durch Anführung von Stellen aus der Schrift] solcher Trost und Hoffnung geschwächt oder gar genommen [wird], so ist gewiß, daß sie wider des Heiligen Geistes Willen und Meinung verstanden und ausgelegt werde.

Bei dieser einfältigen, richtigen, nützlichen Erklärung, die in Gottes [geoffenbarten] Willen beständigen guten Grund hat, bleiben wir, stehen und meiden alle hohen, spitzigen Fragen und Dis-tuita misericordia in Christo (absque omnibus nostris meritis aut bonis operibus) salvos nos faciat, secundum voluntatis suae propositum. Sic enim scriptum est [Eph. 1, 5 sq.]: Qui praedestinavit nos in adoptionem filiorum per Jesum Christum, in ipsum, in laudem gloriae gratiae suae, in qua acceptos nos fecit in 88] Dilecto. Falsum igitur est et cum Verbo Dei pugnat, cum docetur, quod non sola Dei misericordia et unicum sanctissimum Christi meritum, verum etiam aliquid in nobis causa sit electionis divinae, propter quod nos Deus ad vitam aeternam praedestinaverit. Non enim tantum antequam aliquid boni faceremus, verum etiam priusquam nasceremur, imo ante iacta fundamenta mundi, elegit nos Deus in Christo. Ut secundum electionem propositum Dei maneret, non ex operibus, sed ex vocante, dictum est ei: Maior serviet minori. Sicut scriptum est: Iacob dilexi, Esau autem odio habui, Rom. 9, 11 sqq., Gen. 25, 23; Mal. 1, 2 sq.

89] Sed et haec pia doctrina nulli vel ad animi angustias, vel ad vitam dissolutam et impiam ullam occasionem praebet, [R. 822 quando videlicet homines docentur, quod aeternam electionem in Christo, qui liber vitae est, et sancto eius evangelio quaerere debeant. Evangelion enim nullum resipiscentem peccatorem a salute excludit, sed ad poenitentiam, ad agnitionem peccatorum suorum et ad fidem in Christum omnes peccato gravatos et sensu irae Dei perturbatos peccatores vocat et invitat et Spiritum Sanctum ad emundationem 90] et sanctificationem promittit. Etenim hic articulus recte et dextre explicatus veram et omnium firmissimam consolationem perturbatis mentibus praebet, quia inde certi sunt, quod salus aeterna non in manu ipsorum sit posita (quam alias multo facilius quam Adam et Eva in paradiso, imo singulis horis et momentis amitterent), sed norunt, eam in clementi divina praedestinatione fundatam esse, quam nobis revelavit in Christo, ex cuius manu nemo nos rapit, Ioh. 10, 28; 2 Tim. 2, 19.

91] Quare si quis doctrinam de aeterna Dei praedestinatione eo modo proponat, ut vel perturbatae mentes ex ea consolationem nullam haurire possint, sed potius ad desperationem illis ansa praebeatur, vel imponentes in sua securitate, improbitate et malitia confirmantur, tum nihil certius est, quam quod articulus de electione non ad normam et iuxta voluntatem Dei, sed secundum humanae rationis caecum iudicium et ex impulsu atque instinctu diaboli male et perverse doceatur.

92] Quidquid enim scriptum est (ut apostolus Rom. 16, 4 testatur), in doctrinam nostram scriptum est, ut per patientiam et consolationem Scripturae spem habeamus. Quodsi nobis per Scripturam consolatio illa vel enervatur vel eripitur, certo certius est, Scripturam contra sententiam et mentem Spiritus Sancti explicari et intelligi.

93] In hac simplici, perspicua et salutari declaratione, quae in voluntate Dei [R. 823 revelata solidissimum habet fundamentum, acquiescimus et omnes argutas, curiosas et

He saves us out of pure [and free] mercy, without any merits or good works of ours, according to the purpose of His will, as it is written Eph. 1, 5 f.: Having predestinated us unto the adoption of children by Jesus Christ to Himself, according to the good pleasure of His will, to the praise of the glory of His grace, wherein He hath made us accepted in the Beloved. Therefore it is false and wrong [conflicts with the Word of God] when it is taught that not alone the mercy of God and the most holy merit of Christ, but that also in us there is a cause of God's election, on account of which God has chosen us to eternal life. For not only before we had done anything good, but also before we were born, yea, even before the foundations of the world were laid, He elected us in Christ; and that the purpose of God according to election might stand, not of works, but of Him that calleth, it was said unto her, The elder shall serve the younger; as it is written concerning this matter, Jacob have I loved, but Esau have I hated, Rom. 9, 11 ff.; Gen. 25, 23; Mal. 1, 2 f.

Moreover, this doctrine gives no one a cause either for despondency or for a shameless, dissolute life, namely, when men are taught that they must seek eternal election in Christ and His holy Gospel, as in the Book of Life, which excludes no penitent sinner, but beckons and calls all the poor, heavy-laden, and troubled sinners [who are disturbed by the sense of God's wrath], to repentance and the knowledge of their sins and to faith in Christ, and promises the Holy Ghost for purification and renewal, and thus gives the most enduring consolation to all troubled, afflicted men, that they know that their salvation is not placed in their own hands, — for otherwise they would lose it much more easily than was the case with Adam and Eve in paradise, yea, every hour and moment, — but in the gracious election of God, which He has revealed to us in Christ, out of whose hand no man shall pluck us, John 10, 28; 2 Tim. 2, 19.

Accordingly, if any one presents the doctrine concerning the gracious election of God in such a manner that troubled Christians cannot derive comfort from it, but are thereby incited to despair, or that the impenitent are confirmed in their wantonness, it is undoubtedly sure and true that such a doctrine is taught, not according to the Word and will of God, but according to [the blind judgment of human] reason and the instigation of the devil.

For, as the apostle testifies, Rom. 15, 4: Whatsoever things were written aforetime were written for our learning, that we through patience and comfort of the Scriptures might have hope. But when this consolation and hope are weakened or entirely removed by Scripture, it is certain that it is understood and explained contrary to the will and meaning of the Holy Ghost.

DE ALIIS HAERETICIS ET SECTARIIS, qui Augustanam Confessionem nunquam sunt amplexi.

1] Irrepserunt etiam hinc inde alii quidam haeretici et sectarii, qui Augustanam Confessionem non amplectuntur aut profitentur, quorum in hac declaratione nominatim nullam mentionem fecimus, ut sunt: Anabaptistae, Schwencfeldiani, Novi Ariani et Antitrinitarii. 2] Horum errores unanimi consensu ab omnibus ecclesiis Augustanam confessionem profitentibus damnati sunt. Noluimus autem de illis erroribus in hoc scripto nisi incidenter agere, propterea quod hoc tempore scopum illum praefixum habuerimus, ut potissimum adversariorum pontificiorum calumnias refutarem.

3] Illi enim sine fronte in toto Christiano orbe ecclesias nostras earumque sinceros doctores hactenus traduxerunt atque iactarunt non reperiri duos saltem evangelicos concionatores, qui de omnibus et singulis articulis Augustanae Confessionis consentiant, sed tantas inter eos omnes esse dissensiones, ut ne quidem amplius norint, quae sit vera Augustana Confessio et ipsius genuina et germana sententia. 4] Non igitur nudis et paucis verbis aut nomi-

tion in God's revealed will, we abide; we flee from, and shun, all lofty, acute questions and disputations [useless for edifying]; and reject and condemn whatever is contrary to these simple, useful explanations.

So much concerning the controverted articles which have been discussed for many years already among the theologians of the Augsburg Confession, in which some have erred and severe controversiae (controversies), that is, religious disputes, have arisen.

From this our explanation, friends and enemies, and therefore every one, may clearly infer that we have no intention of yielding aught of the eternal, immutable truth of God for the sake of temporal peace, tranquillity, and unity (which, moreover, is not in our power to do). Nor would such peace and unity, since it is devised against the truth and for its suppression, have any permanency. Still less are we inclined to adorn and conceal a corruption of the pure doctrine and manifest, condemned errors. But we entertain heartfelt pleasure and love for, and are on our part sincerely inclined and anxious to advance, that unity according to our utmost power, by which His glory remains to God uninjured, nothing of the divine truth of the Holy Gospel is surrendered, no room is given to the least error, poor sinners are brought to true, genuine repentance, raised up by faith, confirmed in new obedience, and thus justified and eternally saved alone through the sole merit of Christ.

XII.

OF OTHER FACTIONS [HERETICS] AND SECTS,

Which Never Embraced the Augsburg Confession.

However, as regards the sects and factions [sectarists and heretics] which never have embraced the Augsburg Confession, and of which express mention has not been made in this our explanation, such as are the Anabaptists, Schwenckfeldians, New Arians, and Anti-Trinitarians, whose errors have been unanimously condemned by all churches of the Augsburg Confession, we have not wished to make particular and especial mention of them in this explanation, for the reason that at the present time this has been our only aim [that we might above all refute the charges of our adversaries, the Papists].

Since our opponents alleged with shameless mouths, and decried throughout all the world our churches and their teachers, claiming that not two preachers are found who agree in each and every article of the Augsburg Confession, but that they are rent asunder and separated from one another to such an extent that they themselves no longer know what is the Augs-

Itaque sententiam nostram liquidissime proponimus, ut adversarios etiam nostros fateri oporteat, quod in tota hac controversiarum tractatione et explicatione veram, simplicem, sinceram, genuinam atque propriissimam Augustanae Confessionis sententiam retinere voluerimus. Et sane in ea pia sententia per gratiam Dei constanter ad ultimum usque spiritum perseverare cupimus. Et quantum quidem proficisci

Atque illi sane errores maxime in his locis et tum temporis potissimum irrepserunt (ut est ingenium fanaticorum spirituum), ubi sincero Christi evangelio locus non erat, et unde omnes [R. 826] sinceri doctores et confessores evangelii fuere repulsi aut eiecti. Ubi enim crassissimae et plus quam cimmeriae, ut dici solet, papatus tenebrae regnabant, ibi miseri homines, qui pontificiam manifestissimam idololatriam et falsam doctrinam tantum non manibus pal-

Errores Anabaptistarum.

9] Reicimus et damnamus falsa Anabaptistarum dogmata, quae neque in ecclesia Dei neque in politia neque in oeconomia tolerari possunt.

10] I. Quod iustitia nostra coram Deo non tantum in sola obedientia et unico merito Christi, verum etiam in nostra renovatione et propria iustitia (in qua coram Deo ambulamus) consistat. Et eam probitatem seu iustitiam Anabaptistae ut plurimum in peculiariibus observationibus et sua quadam electicia sanctimonia, quasi in quodam novo monachatu, collocant.

burg Confession and its proper [true, genuine, and germane] sense; we have not made a joint confession only in brief words or names, but wished to make a pure, clear, distinct declaration concerning all the disputed articles which have been discussed and controverted only among the theologians of the Augsburg Confession, in order that every one may see that we do not wish in a cunning manner to dissemble or cover up all this, or to come to an agreement only in appearance; but to remedy the matter thoroughly, and have wished to set forth our opinion of these matters in such a manner that even our adversaries themselves must confess that in all this we abide by the true, simple, natural, and proper sense of the Augsburg Confession, in which we desire, moreover, by God's grace, to persevere constantly until our end; and so far as it depends on our service, we will not connive at or be silent, lest anything contrary to the same [the genuine and sacred sense of the Augsburg Confession] is introduced into our churches and schools, in which the almighty God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ has appointed us teachers and pastors.

However, lest there be silently ascribed to us the condemned errors of the above enumerated factions and sects ["of which evil the papistic tyranny, which persecutes the pure doctrine, is the chief cause"], — which, as is the nature of such spirits, for the most part, secretly stole in at localities, and especially at a time when no place or room was given to the pure Word of the holy Gospel, but all its sincere teachers and confessors were persecuted, and the deep darkness of the Papacy still prevailed, and poor simple men who could not help but feel the manifest idolatry and false faith of the Papacy, in their simplicity, alas! embraced whatever was called the Gospel, and was not papistic, — we could not forbear testifying also against them publicly, before all Christendom, that we have neither part nor fellowship with their errors, be they many or few, but reject and condemn them, one and all, as wrong and heretical, and contrary to the Scriptures of the prophets and apostles, and to our Christian Augsburg Confession, well grounded in God's Word.

Erroneous Articles of the Anabaptists.

Namely, for instance, the erroneous, heretical doctrines of the Anabaptists, which are to be tolerated and allowed neither in the Church, nor in the commonwealth, nor in domestic life, when they teach:

1. That our righteousness before God consists not only in the sole obedience and merit of Christ, but in our renewal and our own piety in which we walk before God; which they, for the most part, base upon their own peculiar ordinances and self-chosen spirituality, as upon a new sort of monkery.

2. Daß die Kinder, so nicht getauft, vor Gott nicht Sünder, sondern gerecht und unschuldig seien und also in ihrer Unschuld ohne die Taufe, deren sie nicht bedürfen, selig werden. Verleugnen und verwerfen also die ganze Lehre von der Erbsünde, und was derselben anhängig.

3. Daß die Kinder nicht sollen getauft werden, bis sie zu ihrem Verstand kommen und ihren Glauben selbst bekennen können.

4. Daß der Christen Kinder darum, weil sie von christlichen und gläubigen Eltern geboren, auch ohne und vor der Taufe heilig und Gottes Kinder seien, auch der Ursache [halber] der Kinder Taufe weder hochhalten noch befördern, wider die ausdrücklichen Worte der Verheißung, die sich allein auf die ersteden, welche den Bund halten und denselben nicht verachten, Gen. 17.

5. Daß dieß keine rechte christliche Versammlung noch Gemeinde sei, in der noch Sünder gefunden werden.

6. Daß man keine Predigt hören noch besuchen soll in den Tempeln, darin zuvor päpstliche Messen gelesen worden.

7. Daß man nichts mit den Kirchendienern, so das heilige Evangelium vermöge Augsburger Konfession predigen und der Wiedertäufer Irrtum strafen, zu schaffen haben, ihnen auch weder dienen noch etwas arbeiten, sondern [sic] als die Verfehrer Gottes Wortes fliehen und meiden solle.

8. Daß die Obrigkeit kein gottseliger Stand im neuen Testament sei.

9. Daß ein Christenmensch mit gutem, unverletztem Gewissen das Amt der Obrigkeit nicht tragen könne.

10. Daß ein Christ mit unverletztem Gewissen das Amt der Obrigkeit in zufälligen Sachen wider die Bösen nicht [ge]brauchen noch derselben Unterthanen ihre Gewalt anrufen mögen.

11. Daß ein Christenmensch mit gutem Gewissen keinen Eid vor Gericht schwören noch mit Eid seinem Landesfürsten oder Oberherrn die Erbhuldigung tun könne.

12. Daß die Obrigkeit mit unverletztem Gewissen die Übeltäter am Leben nicht strafen könne.

13. Daß ein Christ mit gutem Gewissen nichts Eigenes behalten noch besitzen könne, sondern schuldig sei, dasselbe in die Gemeinde [in die Gemeindegemeinschaft] zu geben.

14. Daß ein Christ mit gutem Gewissen kein Gastgeber, Kaufmann oder Messerschmied sein könne.

15. Daß Eheleute um des Glaubens willen sich voneinander scheiden und eins das andere verlassen und mit einem andern, das seines Glaubens ist, sich verehelichen möge.

16. Daß Christus sein Fleisch und Blut nicht von Maria der Jungfrau angenommen, sondern vom Himmel mit sich gebracht [habe].

17. Daß er auch nicht wahrer, wesentlicher Gott sei, sondern nur mehr und höhere Gaben und Herrlichkeit denn andere Menschen habe.

11] II. Quod infantes non baptizati coram Deo non sint peccatores, sed iusti et prorsus innocentes, et quod in sua illa innocentia sine baptismo (quo non indigeant) salventur. Et hac ratione negant atque reiiciunt Anabaptistae totam de originali peccato doctrinam et quidquid ad eam pertinet.

12] III. Quod docent, infantes non esse baptizandos, donec usum rationis habeant et fidem suam ipsi confiteri possint.

13] IV. Infantes Christianorum ob eam causam (etiam sine baptismo et ante susceptum baptismum) sanctos et filios Dei esse, quod parentibus Christianis prognati sint. [R. 827] Unde et baptismum infantum non magni faciunt, neque admodum urgent. Id quod pugnat cum expressis verbis promissionis, quae ad eos tantum pertinet, qui foedus Dei observant, neque illud contemnunt [Gen. 17, 9].

14] V. Non esse eam veram et Christianam ecclesiam, in qua peccatores reperiantur.

15] VI. Non esse conciones sacras audientibus in iis templis, in quibus aliquando missae pontificiae sunt celebratae.

16] VII. Non habendum quidquam commercii cum ecclesiae ministris, qui et sanctum Christi evangelium iuxta piam Augustanae Confessionis sententiam docent et Anabaptistarum errores refutant, neque illis operam locandam, quin potius ut Verbi Dei corruptores fugiendos atque vitandos esse.

17] VIII. Magistratus officium non esse (in novo testamento) genus vitae, homine et pio et Christiano dignum.

18] IX. Hominem pium salva conscientia officio magistratus fungi non posse.

19] X. Hominem Christianum illaesa conscientia officium magistratus, re ita postulante, adversus facinorosos facere et exsequi non posse, nec quemquam subditorum implorare opem magistratus debere.

20] XI. Christianos sana conscientia in foro civili iuramentum praestare aut principi ac magistratui suo fidem sub religione iurisiurandi astringere non posse.

21] XII. Quod magistratus sotes et morte dignos supplicio capitis afficere sine vulnere et labe conscientiae nequeat.

22] XIII. Hominem Christianum salva sua conscientia proprium tenere ac possidere non posse, sed oportere, quidquid id est, in communem fiscum conferre.

23] XIV. Hominem pium sana conscientia non posse cauponariam aut mercaturam exercere aut arma conficere.

24] XV. Coniugibus propter religionis diversitatem divortium facere et matrimonium cum alia persona, quacum in religione conveniat, contrahere licitum esse.

25] XVI. Christum carnem et sanguinem suum non e Maria virgine assumpsisse, [R. 828] sed de coelo attulisse.

26] XVII. Christum non esse verum et essentialem Deum, sed duntaxat alios homines multitudine et excellentia donorum et gloriae superare.

2. That children who are not baptized are not sinners before God, but righteous and innocent, and thus are saved in their innocence without Baptism, which they do not need. Accordingly, they deny and reject the entire doctrine concerning original sin and what belongs to it.

3. That children are not to be baptized until they have attained the use of reason and can confess their faith themselves.

4. That the children of Christians, since they have been born of Christian and believing parents, are holy and the children of God even without and before Baptism; and for this reason they neither attach much importance to the baptism of children nor encourage it, contrary to the express words of the promise, which extends only to those who keep God's covenant and do not despise it, Gen. 17, 9.

5. That a congregation [church] in which sinners are still found is no true Christian assembly.

6. That no sermon should be heard or attended in those churches in which the papal masses have previously been said.

7. That no one should have anything to do with those ministers of the Church who preach the holy Gospel according to the Augsburg Confession, and rebuke the errors of the Anabaptists; also, that no one should serve or in any way labor for them, but should flee from and shun them as perverters of God's Word.

8. That under the New Testament the magistracy is not a godly estate.

9. That a Christian cannot with a good, inviolate conscience hold the office of magistrate.

10. That a Christian cannot without injury to conscience use the office of the magistracy in matters that may occur [when the matter so demands] against the wicked, neither can its subjects appeal to its power.

11. That a Christian cannot with a good conscience take an oath before a court, nor with an oath do homage to his prince or hereditary sovereign.

12. That magistrates cannot without injury to conscience inflict capital punishment upon evil-doers.

13. That a Christian cannot with a good conscience hold or possess any property, but is in duty bound to devote it to the common treasury.

14. That a Christian cannot with a good conscience be an inn-keeper, merchant, or cutler.

15. That married persons may be divorced on account of faith [diversity of religion], and that the one may abandon the other, and be married to another of his own faith.

16. That Christ did not assume His flesh and blood of the Virgin Mary, but brought them with Him from heaven.

17. That He is not true, essential God either, but only has more and higher gifts and glory than other men.

Und dergleichen andere Artikel mehr; wie sie denn untereinander in viel Haufen geteilt [sind], und einer mehr, der andere weniger Irrthümer hat, und also ihre ganze Sekte im Grunde anders nichts denn eine neue Möncherei ist.

Irrige Artikel der Schwendfeldianer.

Desgleichen, da die Schwendfeldianer vorgeben:

1. Erstlich, daß alle die keine Erkenntnis des regierenden Himmelskönigs Christi haben, die Christum nach dem Fleisch oder seine angenommene Menschheit für eine Kreatur halten, und daß das Fleisch Christi durch die Erhöhung alle göttlichen Eigenschaften also angenommen, daß er an Macht, Kraft, Majestät, Herrlichkeit dem Vater und dem ewigen Wort allenthalben in Grad und Stelle des Wesens gleich [sei], also daß einerlei Wesen, Eigenschaft, Wille und Glorie beider Naturen in Christo sei, und daß Christi Fleisch zu dem Wesen der heiligen Dreifaltigkeit gehöre.

2. Daß der Kirchendienst, das gepredigte und gehörte Wort, nicht sei ein Mittel, dadurch Gott der Heilige Geist den [die] Menschen lehre, seligmachende Erkenntnis Christi, Befehung, Buße, Glauben, neuen Gehorsam in ihnen wirke.

3. Daß das Taufwasser nicht sei ein Mittel, dadurch Gott der Herr die Kinderschaft versiegele und die Wiedergeburt wirke.

4. Daß Brot und Wein im heiligen Abendmahl nicht Mittel seien, dadurch Christus seinen Leib und Blut austheile.

5. Daß ein Christenmensch, der wahrhaftig durch den Geist Gottes wiedergeboren, das Gesetz Gottes in diesem Leben vollkommen halten und erfüllen könne.

6. Daß [es] keine rechte christliche Gemeinde sei, da kein öffentlicher Ausschluß oder ordentlicher Prozeß des Bannes gehalten werde.

7. Daß der Diener der Kirche andere Leute nicht nützlich lehren oder rechte, wahrhaftige Sacramente reichen könne, der nicht für seine Person wahrhaftig verneuert, gerecht und fromm sei.

Irrige Artikel der neuen Arianer.

Item, da die neuen Arianer lehren, daß Christus nicht ein wahrhaftiger, wesentlicher, natürlicher Gott, e i n e s ewigen göttlichen Wesens mit Gott dem Vater, sondern allein mit göttlicher Majestät unter und neben Gott dem Vater gezietet sei.

Irrige Artikel der neuen Antitrinitarier.

1. Item, da etliche Antitrinitarier die alten, bewährten Symbola, Nicaenum et Athanasianum, beide was die Meinung und Worte belangt, verworfen und verdammen und lehren, daß nicht ein 27) Hos atque similes falsos articulos Anabaptistae profitentur. Et quidem in multas sectas sunt divisi, et alii plures, alii pauciores religionis errores amplectuntur. Tota vero ipsorum secta nil nisi novus quidam est monachismus.

Errores Schwendfeldianorum.

28) Reicimus atque damnatus etiam Schwendfeldianorum errores, quibus docent:

29) I. Quod omnes illi non habeant coelestis regis Christi iam regnantis veram agnitionem, qui sentiunt, Christum secundum carnem seu Christi humanam naturam esse creaturam, quod caro Christi per exaltationem omnes divinas proprietates ita acceperit, ut iam Christus, humanitatis suae ratione, potentia, virtute, maiestate, gloria Patri et aeterno Verbo prorsus gradu, loco et essentia sit aequalis, ita ut sit eadem omnino utriusque naturae in Christo essentia, eadem proprietates, una eademque voluntas, una gloria, quod denique caro Christi ad essentiam Sacrosanctae Trinitatis pertineat.

30) II. Quod ministerium ecclesiasticum, hoc est, Verbum Dei praedicatum et auditum, non sit medium seu instrumentum, quo Deus Spiritus Sanctus homines doceat et per quod ipsis donet veram Christi agnitionem, poenitentiam et fidem, et quo in ipsis novam obedientiam operetur.

31) III. Quod aqua baptismi non sit medium aut instrumentum, quo Dominus adoptionem filiorum Dei obisignet et homines regeneret.

32) IV. Quod panis et vinum in Sacra Coena non sint media seu instrumenta, cum [R. 829] quibus Christus corpus et sanguinem suum distribuat.

33) V. Quod homo Christianus vere per Spiritum Dei renatus legem Dei in hac vita perfecte implere possit.

34) VI. Quod non sit ea vera et Christiana ecclesia, in qua non externa excommunicatio vigeat, aut in qua non externus ordinarius excommunicationis modus, delectus et processus observetur.

35) VII. Quod is ecclesiae minister non possit alios salubriter docere aut sacramenta rite administrare, qui non ipse sit vere renovatus, iustus et pius.

Errores Novorum Arianorum.

36) Reicimus et damnatus etiam novorum Arianorum impium et blasphemum dogma, quod affirmant, Christum non esse verum, essentialem, naturalem Deum, eiusdem aeternae atque divinae essentiae cum Deo Patre, sed fingunt eundem tantummodo divina maiestate cum Patre ornatum, ita ut revera sit inferior Deo Patre.

Errores Novorum Antitrinitariorum.

37) I. Quod Antitrinitarii aliqui vetera et in ecclesia Christi approbata Symbola, Nicaenum et Athanasianum, tum quoad verba tum quoad sententiam repudiant atque condemnant.

And still more articles of like kind; for they are divided among themselves into many bands [sects], and one has more and another fewer errors, and thus their entire sect is in reality nothing but a new kind of monkery.

Erroneous Articles of the Schwenckfeldians.

Likewise, when the Schwenckfeldians assert:

1. First, that all those have no knowledge of the reigning King of heaven, Christ, who regard Christ according to the flesh, or His assumed humanity, as a creature, and that the flesh of Christ has by exaltation so assumed all divine properties that in might, power, majesty, and glory He is in every respect, in degree and position of essence, equal to the Father and the eternal Word, so that there is the same essence, properties, will, and glory of both natures in Christ, and that the flesh of Christ belongs to the essence of the Holy Trinity.

2. That the ministry of the Church, the Word preached and heard, is not a means whereby God the Holy Ghost teaches men, and works in them saving knowledge of Christ, conversion, repentance, faith, and new obedience.

3. That the water of Baptism is not a means by which God the Lord seals adoption and works regeneration.

4. That bread and wine in the Holy Supper are not means by which Christ distributes His body and blood.

5. That a Christian man who is truly regenerated by God's Spirit can in this life keep and fulfil the Law of God perfectly.

6. That a congregation in which no public excommunication or regular process of the ban is observed, is no true Christian congregation [church].

7. That the minister of the Church who is not on his part truly renewed, righteous, and godly cannot teach other men with profit or administer real, true sacraments.

Erroneous Articles of the New Arians.

Also, when the New Arians teach that Christ is not a true, essential, natural God, of one eternal divine essence with God the Father, but is only adorned with divine majesty inferior to, and beside, God the Father.

Erroneous Articles of the New Anti-Trinitarians.

1. Also, when some Anti-Trinitarians reject and condemn the ancient approved symbola, Nicaenum et Athanasianum (the Nicene and Athanasian creeds), as regards both their einig, ewig, göttlich Wesen sei des Vaters, Sohnes und Heiligen Geistes; sondern wie drei unterschiedliche Personen seien, Gott Vater, Sohn und Heiliger Geist, also habe auch eine jede Person ihr unterschiedlich und von andern Personen abgesondert Wesen, die doch entweder alle drei, als sonst drei unterschiedene und in ihrem Wesen abgesonderte Menschen, gleicher Gewalt, Weisheit, Majestät und Herrlichkeit seien, oder am Wesen und Eigenschaften ungleich.

2. Daß allein der Vater wahrer Gott sei.

Diese und dergleichen Artikel anzunehmen, und was denselben anhängt und daraus folgt, verwerfen und verdammen wir als unrecht, falsch, keckerisch, dem Wort Gottes, den drei Symbolis, der Augsburgerischen Confession und Apologia, den Schmalkaldischen Artikeln und Catechismus Lutheri zuwider; vor welchen sich alle frommen Christen hüten wollen und sollen, als lieb ihnen ihrer Seelen Heil und Seligkeit ist.

Derwegen wir uns [weil wir uns nun] vor dem Angesicht Gottes und der ganzen Christenheit, bei den Lebenden und so nach uns kommen werden, bezeugt [öffentlich und feierlich erklärt] haben wollen, daß diese jetztgetane Erklärung von allen vorgelegten und erklärten streitigen Artikeln, und kein anderes, unser Glaube, Lehre und Bekenntnis sei, in welchem wir auch durch die Gnade Gottes mit unerschrockenem Herzen vor dem Richterstuhl Jesu Christi erscheinen und deshalb Rechenschaft geben, dawider auch nichts heimlich noch öffentlich reden oder schreiben wollen, sondern vermittelst der Gnade Gottes dabei gedenken zu bleiben: haben wir wohlbedächtig, in Gottes Furcht und Anrufung uns mit eignen Händen unterschrieben. [Im deutschen Konkordienbuch folgt hier 1. das „Register der vornehmsten Hauptstücke Christlicher Lehre, so in diesem Buch gehandelt werden“; 2. die circa 8000 „Namen der Theologen, Kirchen und Schuldiener“, die das Konkordienbuch unterschrieben haben; 3. das Druckerzeichen, mit Ps. 9, 1. 2 als Inschrift oben: „Ich danke dem Herrn von ganzem Herzen und erzähle alle deine Wunder. Ich freue mich und bin fröhlich in dir und lobe deinen Namen, du Allerhöchster“, und unten: „Gedruckt zu Dresden durch Matthes Stödel. Anno 1580 (1579)“; 4. das „Verzeichniß der Zeugnisse Heiliger Schrift und der alten reinen Kirchenlehrer von der Person und Majestät der menschlichen Natur Christi“.]

Quod iidem haeretici asserunt, non esse unicam tantum aeternam divinam essentiam Patris, Filii et Spiritus Sancti, sed ut tres sunt distinctae Trinitatis personae (videlicet Deus Pater, Filius et Spiritus Sanctus): ita etiam unamquamque personam habere distinctam et ab aliis personis separatam essentiam. Et alii fingunt, tres illas separatas essentias (ut alias tres distinctos et in essentiis [R. 830 suis separatos homines) eiusdem esse potentiae, sapientiae, maiestatis et gloriae; alii vero sentiunt, tres illas personas ratione essentiae et proprietatum non esse aequales.

38] II. Quod solus Pater sit verus Deus.

40] In conspectu igitur Dei omnipotentis et coram tota ecclesia Christi, quae nunc est et quae aliquando in posteritate erit, clara voce et diserte testamur, quod declaratio illa nostra de omnibus commemoratis controversis articulis, et nulla prorsus alia, revera sit nostra doctrina, fides et confessio. In ea per gratiam Dei intrepido animo coram tribunali Iesu Christi comparebimus, de ea iusto Iudici rationem reddituri. Contra hanc declarationem etiam nihil vel occulte vel aperte loquimur aut scribemus, sed in ea, Domino nos bene iuvante, usque ad vitae finem constantes perseverabimus. In eius rei fidem matura cum deliberatione in timore Dei et nominis ipsius invocatione propriis manibus huic declarationi subscripsimus.

sense and words, and teach that there is not only one eternal divine essence of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, but as there are three distinct persons, God the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, so each person has also its essence distinct and separate from the other persons; yet that all three are either as otherwise three men, distinct and separate in their essence, of the same power, wisdom, majesty, and glory [as some imagine], or in essence and properties unequal [as others think].

2. That the Father alone is true God.

These and like articles, one and all, with what pertains to them and follows from them, we reject and condemn as wrong, false, heretical, and contrary to the Word of God, the three Creeds, the Augsburg Confession and Apology, the Smalcald Articles, and the Catechisms of Luther. Of these articles all godly Christians should and ought to beware, as much as the welfare and salvation of their souls is dear to them.

Since now, in the sight of God and of all Christendom [the entire Church of Christ], we wish to testify to those now living and those who shall come after us that this declaration herewith presented concerning all the controverted articles aforementioned and explained, and no other, is our faith, doctrine, and confession, in which we are also willing, by God's grace, to appear with intrepid hearts before the judgment-seat of Jesus Christ, and give an account of it; and that we will neither privately nor publicly speak or write anything contrary to it, but, by the help of God's grace, intend to abide thereby: therefore, after mature deliberation, we have, in God's fear and with the invocation of His name, attached our signatures with our own hands.

Dem Christlichen Leser.

Nachdem besonders im Artitel von der Person Christi etliche mit Ungrund vorgeben, daß im Buch der Konfordinde von den phrasibus und modis loquendi, das ist, von Weise und Art zu reden, der alten reinen Kirche und Väter abgewichen [sei], dagegen neue, fremde, selbsterdachte, ungebrauchliche und unerhörte Reden eingeführt werden, und aber die Zeugnisse der alten Kirche und Väter, darauf sich dies Buch gezogen [bezogen], demselben einzuleiden etwas zu lang sein wollen, welche hernach etlichen Kurfürsten und Fürsten, mit Fleiß ausgezeichnet [egzerpiert], übergeben worden:

Sind dem Christlichen Leser zum wahrhaftigen und gründlichen Bericht dieselben zum Ende dieses Buches in guter Anzahl auf unterschiedliche Punkte beigedruckt worden, darin er sich zu ersehen und alsbald zu befinden [vermag], daß in ermelbetem Buch nichts Neues, weder in rebus noch phrasibus, das ist, weder in der Lehre oder Art und Weise zu reden, gefehlt [sei], sondern daß eben also, wie zuvörderst die Heilige Schrift und folgend die alte reine Kirche getan, von diesem Geheimnis gelehrt und geredet werde.

Als endlich, daß im Buch der Konfordinde von Einigkeit der Person und Unterschied der beiden Naturen in Christo wie auch derselben wesentlichen Eigenschaften also geschrieben, wie die alte reine Kirche, derselben Väter und Konzilia geredet haben, nämlich daß nicht zwei Personen, sondern ein Christus, und in dieser Person zwei unterschiedliche Naturen, die göttliche und menschliche Natur, seien, welche nicht getrennt noch miteinander vermischet oder eine in die andere verwandelt, sondern jede Natur ihre wesentlichen Eigenschaften habe und behalte und in Einigkeit nicht von sich lege, und daß einer Natur wesentliche Eigenschaften, so der ganzen Person wahrhaftig und recht zugeschrieben, der andern Natur Eigenschaften nimmermehr werden: erweisen nachfolgende der alten reinen Konzilien Zeugnisse.

In Ephesino Concilio, can. 4 [Tom. I, concil., p. 606]: Si quis voces Scripturae de Christo in duabus personis vel subsistentiis dividit et aliquas quidem velut homini, qui praeter Dei Verbum specialiter intelligatur, aptaverit, aliquas vero tamquam dignas Deo soli Dei Patris verbo deputaverit, anathema sit. [Der hier und im folgenden gebotene griechische und lateinische Text ist der der offiziellen lateinischen Ausgabe des Konfordinbuchs von 1584.]

Das ist [Im deutschen Konfordinbuch von 1580 sind die Zitate aus den Kirchenvätern und auch die Bibelsprüche zuerst lateinisch gegeben; die deutsche Übersetzung wird deshalb eingeleitet mit „Das ist“ oder mit dem bloßen Namen des Autors]: In dem vierten Kanon oder Regel des Ephesinischen Konzilii ist also geschlossen: So jemand die Reden der Schrift von Christo in zwei Personen trennt, daß derselben etliche als dem Menschen, der außer und ohne des Vaters Wort oder ohne den Sohn Gottes verstanden werde, zugelegt, etliche aber allein dem Sohn Gottes, als die allein Gotte zugehören, zugeschrieben werden, der sei verflucht.

Canone 5: Si quis audeat dicere, Hominem Christum theophoron ac non potius Deum esse, tamquam Filium per naturam veraciter dixerit, secundum quod Verbum caro factum est, et communicaverit similiter ut nos carni et sanguini, anathema sit.

Im fünften Kanon also: So jemand sagen darf, daß der Mensch Christus Gott getragen, und nicht vielmehr, daß er wahrhaftig Gott, als der natürliche Sohn Gottes, sei, nachdem oder darum, daß das Wort Fleisch [ge]worden ist und theilhaftig [ge]worden Fleisches und Blutes gleichwie wir, der sei verflucht.

AD CHRISTIANUM LECTOREM.

Quum Librum Concordiae, praesertim articulum de persona Christi, hac calumnia deformare non vereantur nonnulli, quod a phrasibus et modis loquendi, veteri ac puriori ecclesiae atque patribus orthodoxis receptis et approbatis recedendo, novas, peregrinas, proprio arbitrio excogitatas, inusitatas et inauditas loquendi formulas in ecclesiam invehat, testimonia vero antiquissimae ecclesiae et patrum, ad quae in hoc ipso Libro provocatur, eidem inseri nimis longe futurum sit, quae postea illustrissimis aliquot Electoribus et Principibus exhibita sunt, singulari diligentia excerpta et consignata:

Ideo recte et solide informandi Christiani lectoris causa mediocriter eorum cumulus, certis capitibus distinctus, ad calcem Libri adiectus est, unde illi cognoscere facile erit in modo nominato Libro, neque quod ad res neque quod ad phrasen attinet, id est, neque in doctrina neque in sermonis genere quidquam innovatum, sed cum Sacrae Scripturae tum veteris atque purioris ecclesiae de hoc mysterio tam doctrinam quam loquendi formam retentam atque usurpatam esse.

Sic primo, quod Liber Concordiae in articulo de unitate personae et discrimine duarum naturarum in Christo earumque essentialibus proprietatibus veteris ac purioris ecclesiae, patrum eiusdem et conciliorum doctrinam et sermonem imitetur, asserendo nimirum non duas personas Christi, sed unum Christum, et hanc personam in duabus distinctis naturis subsistentem, divina scilicet et humana, non divulsis, neque confusis aut una in alteram conversa, sed ita ut utraque natura substantialis proprietates suas retineat, neque in omnem aeternitatem easdem deponat, et unius naturae proprietates essentielles, quae toti personae recte et vere ascribuntur, nunquam fiant alterius naturae idiomata: id ostendunt sequentia veterum puriorum conciliorum testimonia.

TO THE CHRISTIAN READER.

Since, especially in the article of the Person of Christ, some have without reason asserted that in the Book of Concord there is a deviation from phrasibus and modis loquendi, that is, the phrases and modes of speech of [received and approved by] the ancient pure Church and fathers, and that, on the contrary, new, strange, self-devised, unusual and unheard-of expressions are introduced; and since the testimonies of the ancient Church and fathers to which this book appeals proved somewhat too extended to be incorporated in it, and, having been carefully excerpted, were afterwards delivered to several electors and princes, —

[Therefore] they are printed in goodly number as an appendix at the end of this book, in regard to particular points, for the purpose of furnishing a correct and thorough account to the Christian reader, whereby he may perceive and readily discover that in the aforesaid book nothing new has been introduced either in rebus (matter) or in phrasibus (expressions), that is, neither as regards the doctrine nor the manner of teaching it, but that we have taught and spoken concerning this mystery just as, first of all, the Holy Scriptures and afterwards the ancient pure Church have done.

Thus, in the first place, concerning the unity of the person and the distinction of the two natures in Christ, and their essential properties, the Book of Concord writes just as the ancient pure Church, its fathers and councils, have spoken — namely, that there are not two persons, but one Christ, and in this person two distinct natures, the divine and the human nature, which are not separated nor intermingled or transformed the one into the other, but each nature has and retains its essential attributes, and in [all] eternity does not lay them aside; and that the essential attributes of the one nature, which are truly and properly ascribed to the entire person, never become attributes of the other natures. This is borne out by the following testimonies of the ancient pure councils:

In the fourth canon, or rule, of the Council of Ephesus occurs the following resolution: "If any one divides the words of Scripture regarding Christ in two persons or subsistences, and applies some of them indeed to Him as man, who is to be understood specially, outside of the Word of God [outside of or without the Word of the Father, or without the Son of God], and assigns others, as worthy of God alone, to the Word of God the Father [some, however, only to the Son of God, as belonging to God alone], let him be accursed."

In the fifth canon, thus: "If any one dares to say that the man Christ is the Bearer of God, and not rather that He is God, so as to call Him truly the Son by nature [that as the natural Son of God He is truly God], because it was the Word that was made flesh, and, in a similar manner [even] as we, became sharer of flesh and blood, let him be accursed."

Canone 6: Si quis non confitetur, eundem Christum Deum simul et hominem, propterea quod Verbum caro factum est, secundum Scripturas, anathema sit.

Im sechsten Canon also: So jemand nicht bekennet, daß der einige Christus zugleich Gott und Mensch sei, darum daß das Wort vermöge Heiliger Schrift ist Fleisch [ge]worden, der sei verflucht.

Canone 12: Si quis non confitetur, Dei Verbum passum carne et crucifixum carne et morte carne gustasse, factumque primogenitum ex mortuis, secundum quod vita et vivificator est ut Deus, anathema sit.

Im zwölften Canon also: So jemand nicht bekennet, daß das Wort des Vaters am Fleisch gelitten habe und am Fleisch gekreuzigt sei und den Tod am Fleisch geschmeckt [habe] und der Erstgeborne aus den Toten [ge]worden sei, nachdem er das Leben und ein Lebendigmacher ist, nämlich als Gott, der sei verflucht.

Et Decretum Chalcedonensis Concilii, citante Evagrio, lib. 2, cap. 4, sic habet: Ἐπόμενοι τοῖνυν τοῖς ἁγίοις πατέροις ἕνα καὶ τὸν αὐτὸν ὁμολογοῦμεν Υἱὸν τὸν Κύριον ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν, καὶ ὁμοφώνως ἅπαντες ἐκδιδάσκουμεν, τέλειον τὸν αὐτὸν ἐν Θεότητι καὶ τέλειον τὸν αὐτὸν ἐν ἀνθρωπότητι, Θεὸν ἀληθῶς καὶ ἄνθρωπον ἀληθῶς τὸν αὐτὸν, ἐκ ψυχῆς λογικῆς καὶ σώματος, ὁμοούσιον τῷ Πατρὶ κατὰ τὴν Θεότητα, καὶ ὁμοούσιον ἡμῖν τὸν αὐτὸν κατὰ τὴν ἀνθρωπότητα, κατὰ πάντα ὅμοιον ἡμῖν χωρὶς ἁμαρτίας, πρὸ αἰώνων μὲν ἐκ τοῦ Πατρὸς γεννηθέντα κατὰ τὴν Θεότητα, ἐκ' ἐσχάτων δὲ τῶν ἡμερῶν τὸν αὐτὸν δι' ἡμᾶς καὶ διὰ τὴν ἡμετέραν σωτηρίαν ἐκ Μαρίας τῆς παρθένου καὶ Θεοτόκου κατὰ τὴν ἀνθρωπότητα, ἕνα καὶ τὸν αὐτὸν Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν, Υἱόν, Κύριον, μονογενῆ, ἐν δύο φύσεσιν ἀσυγχύτως, ἀτρέπτως, ἀδιαιρέτως, ἀχωρίστως γνωριζόμενον, οὐδαμοῦ τῆς τῶν φύσεων διαφοράς ἀνηρημένης, διὰ τὴν ἑνωσιν, σωζομένης δὲ μάλλον τῆς ἰδιότητος ἑκατέρας φύσεως, καὶ εἰς ἐν πρόσωπον καὶ μίαν ὑπόστασιν συντρεχούσης, οὐχ ὡς εἰς δύο πρόσωπα μεριζόμενον ἢ διαιρούμενον, ἀλλ' ἕνα καὶ τὸν αὐτὸν Υἱὸν μονογενῆ, Θεὸν Λόγον καὶ Κύριον Ἰησοῦν Χριστόν, καθάπερ ἄνωθεν οἱ προφῆται περὶ αὐτοῦ καὶ αὐτὸς ἡμᾶς ὁ Χριστὸς ἐξεπαίδευσεν καὶ τὸ τῶν πατέρων ἡμῖν παραδέδωκε σύμβολον.

Sequentes igitur sanctos patres, confitemur unum et eundem Filium, Dominum nostrum Iesum Christum, et una voce omnes deprædicamus eundem perfectum in divinitate et perfectum eundem in humanitate, vere Deum et vere hominem eundem, ex anima rationali et corpore, consubstantiali Patri secundum divinitatem et consubstantiali nobis secundum humanitatem, per omnia nobis similem absque peccato, ante sæcula quidem ex Patre genitum secundum divinitatem, in extremis autem diebus ipsum eundem propter nos et propter nostram salutem ex Maria virgine, Dei genetrice secundum humanitatem genitum, unum et eundem Iesum Christum, Filium et Dominum unigenitum, in duabus naturis inconfuse, inconvertibiliter, indivise, insegregabiliter cognitum, nequaquam naturarum sublata propter unionem, sed servata potius proprietate utriusque naturae et utraque in unam personam concurrente, non velut in duas personas dispertitum aut divisum, sed unum et eundem Filium unigenitum, Deum, Verbum et Dominum Iesum Christum; quemadmodum olim prophetae et de se ipso Christus ipse nos docuit, et patrum nobis tradidit symbolum (tom. 1. concil., p. 154).

Das ist: Der Beschluß des Chalcedonischen Concilii lautet also: Wir bekennen einen einigen Sohn, unsern Herrn Iesum Christum, vollkommen in der Gottheit und vollkommen in der Menschheit, und daß derselbe wahrhaftiger Gott und wahrhaftiger Mensch, der eine vernünftige Seele und Leib hat, eines Wesens mit dem Vater nach der göttlichen Natur und eines Wesens mit uns nach menschlicher Natur, aller Dinge uns gleich, ohne die Sünde, der zwar vor der Welt von dem Vater nach der Gottheit, zur letzten Zeit aber eben derselbe, um unser- und unsers Heils willen von der Jungfrau Maria, Gottesgebärerin, nach der Menschheit geboren; denselben einigen Iesum Christum, den eingebornen Sohn und Herrn, erkennen wir in zwei Naturen unvermischt, unverwandelt, unzertrennt oder unzerteilt und unabgesondert, also daß der Naturen Unterschied in seinem Wege durch die persönliche Vereinigung aufgehoben sei, sondern daß vielmehr beider Naturen Eigenschaften behalten werden und in eine Person zusammenkommen, nicht als in zwei Personen zerteilt oder zerteilt, sondern wir erkennen einen einigen Christum, unsern Herrn, der zugleich der eingeborne Sohn oder das Wort des Vaters und auch wahrer Mensch ist usw.

Ita etiam decima epistola Leonis synodica (Ad Flavianum, cap. 3, fol. 92) loquitur: Salva proprietate utriusque naturae et in unam coeunte personam, suscepta est a maiestate humilitas, a virtute infirmitas, ab aeternitate mortalitas (abstractum pro concreto), et ad resolvendum conditionis nostrae debitum natura inviolabilis naturae est unita passibili, ut unus et idem Mediator noster et mori posset ex uno et mori non posset ex altero.

Item (cap. 4, fol. 93): Qui verus est Deus, idem verus est homo, dum invicem sunt et humilitas hominis et altitudo Deitatis. Sicut enim Deus non mutatur miseratione, ita homo non consumitur dignitate; agit enim utraque forma cum alterius communione, quod proprium est, Verbo scilicet operante, quod Verbi est, et carne exsequente, quod carnis est. Unum horum coruscat miraculis, alterum succumbit iniuriis. Deus est per id, quod in principio erat Verbum, et Deus erat Verbum, per quod omnia facta sunt. Homo per id, quod Verbum caro factum est, quodque factus est ex muliere. Item propter hanc unitatem personae in utraque natura intelligendam, et filius hominis legitur descendisse de coelo, quum Filius Dei ex Maria virgine carnem assumpserit.

Et rursus (cap. 5, fol. 93): Filius Dei crucifixus dicitur et sepultus, quum haec non in ipsa divinitate, qua consubstantialis est Patri, sed in naturae humanae sit infirmitate perpassus etc.

Hucusque verba utriusque concilii, Ephesini et Chalcedonensis, quibuscum reliqui sancti patres omnes consentiunt.

In the sixth canon, thus: "If any one does not confess the same Christ to be at the same time God and man [that the one Christ is at the same time God and man], for the reason that according to the Scriptures the Word was made flesh, let him be accursed."

In the twelfth canon, thus: "If any one does not confess that the Word of God [the Father] suffered in the flesh, and was crucified in the flesh, and tasted death in the flesh, and became the First-born from the dead, according as [since] He is, as God, the Life and He that maketh alive, let him be accursed."

And the decree of the Council of Chalcedon, as cited by Evagrius, lib. 2, cap. 4, reads thus: "Following, then, the holy fathers, we confess one and the same Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, and we all set forth with one voice that the same is perfect in deity and the same perfect in humanity; that the same is truly God and truly man, consisting of a rational soul and a body; that He is consubstantial with the Father as regards the deity, and that the same is consubstantial with us according to the humanity; that He is in all respects like us, excepting sin; that He was begotten before the world out of the Father according to the deity, but that the same person was in the last days born for us and for our salvation of Mary, the virgin and mother of God, according to the humanity; that one and the same Jesus Christ, the Son, the Lord, the Only-begotten, is known in two natures, without being commingled, without being changed, without being taken apart [or divided], without being segregated, the difference of the natures being in no wise abolished on account of the [personal] union, but the peculiarity of each nature being rather preserved, and running together into one person and subsistence; not as divided or torn into two persons, but one and the same only-begotten Son, God the Word and the Lord Jesus Christ [we acknowledge one single Christ our Lord, who is at once the only-begotten Son, or the Word of the Father, and also true man]; as the prophets of old and the Christ Himself have taught us concerning Him, and the symbol of the fathers has handed down to us."

Thus, too, the Tenth Synodical Epistle of Leo (to Flavianus, cap. 3, fol. 92) [which the Council of Chalcedon regarded as equal to an instruction] says: "[The personal union has taken place in this manner, that] The peculiarity of each nature being unimpaired [remaining unmingled and unchanged], and coming together into one person, there has been assumed by [divine] Majesty [human] lowliness, by [divine] Power [human] weakness, by Eternity [the eternal divine Being] mortality [the human, mortal nature] (abstract for the concrete), and for the purpose of paying the debt of our condition, the [immortal] nature that cannot suffer has been united to the [human] nature that can suffer, so that our one and the same Mediator could both die according to one, and could not die according to the other [in order that our single Mediator, since according to the one nature, namely, the divine, He could not die, might die for us according to the other, namely, the human]."

Likewise (cap. 4, fol. 93): "He who is true God, the same is true man, since both the humility of man and the loftiness of God are reciprocal [exist together in one person]. For just as God does not change by pity [when from pity for us He assumes the human nature], so man is not consumed by divine dignity [and glory]; for each form [nature] does what is peculiar to it, in communion with the other — namely, the Word working what belongs to the Word [the Son of God], and the flesh executing what belongs to the flesh.

Das ist: Die zehnte Epistel Leonis, so dem Concilio Chalcedonensi gleich als eine Instruktion gemeinet, redet auch also: Die persönliche Vereinigung ist also geschehen, daß beider Naturen Eigenschaften unermischt, unverändert geblieben und in eine Person zusammen[ge]kommen sind; und also ist angenommen von der göttlichen Majestät die menschliche Niedrigkeit, von der ewigen Kraft die menschliche Schwachheit, von dem ewigen göttlichen Wesen die menschliche sterbliche Natur, und ist die unsterbliche Natur, so nicht leiden kann, vereinbart [vereinigt] mit der menschlichen sterblichen Natur, so leiden kann, auf daß unser einziger Mittler, weil er nach einer Natur, nämlich der göttlichen, nicht sterben konnte, nach der andern, als der menschlichen, für uns sterben möchte.

Item: Der da ein wahrhaftiger Gott ist, der ist auch ein wahrhaftiger Mensch, weil in einer Person beisammen sind des Menschen Niedrigkeit und die Hoheit der Gottheit. Denn wie Gott nicht geändert wird, wenn er, nämlich aus Mitleiden gegen uns, menschliche Natur annimmt, also wird auch der Mensch Christus nicht verzehrt durch die göttliche Würde und Herrlichkeit. Denn beide Naturen in Christo wirken, eine jede mit der andern Gemeinschaft, was einer jeden Eigenschaft ist, nämlich daß das Wort wirkt, was des Sohnes Gottes ist, und das Fleisch verrichtet, was des Fleisches ist. Eines scheint und leuchtet in den Wunderwerken, das andere wird unterdrückt im Leiden, und ist nämlich gleichwohl ein einziger Mittler, Gott und Mensch; Gott ist er dadurch, darum und daher, weil das Wort war im Anfang, und Gott war das Wort, dadurch alles gemacht ist; Mensch ist er darum, dadurch und daher, weil das Wort ist Fleisch [ge]worden, und weil Gottes Sohn geboren ist vom Weibe. Item: Dieselbe Einigkeit der Person in beiden Naturen anzuzeigen, lesen wir in der Schrift, daß des Menschen Sohn vom Himmel [ge]kommen sei, da doch der Sohn Gottes sein Fleisch von der Jungfrau Maria angenommen. Und wiederum sagt die Schrift, daß der Sohn Gottes gekreuzigt sei und begraben, da er doch solches nicht in seiner Gottheit, da er eines Wesens ist mit dem Vater, sondern in seiner angenommenen menschlichen Natur Schwachheit erlitten hat usw.

Und eben dies haben auch die Gelehrten bis daher in unsern Schulen mit den Worten abstractum und concretum anzeigen und erklären wollen, darauf sich auch das Buch der Konfodie diesesfalls mit wenig Worten gezogen [bezogen], da gesetzt worden: „wie das alles die Gelehrten wohl wissen“; welche Worte im rechten Verstand notwendig in den Schulen erhalten werden müssen. (Im Buch der Konfodie, Fol. 309, lin. 16 [Concordia Triglotta, S. 1028].)

Denn concreta vocabula sind solche Worte, welche in Christo die ganze Person anzeigen, als „Gott“, „Mensch“. Aber abstracta vocabula sind Worte, dadurch die Naturen in der Person Christi verstanden und ausgesprochen werden, als „Gotttheit“, „Menschheit“.

Nach welchem Unterschied recht gesagt wird in concreto: „Gott ist Mensch“, „Mensch ist Gott“. Dagegen ist unrecht geredet, wenn man sagt in abstracto: „Gotttheit ist Menschheit“, „Menschheit ist Gottheit“.

Gleiche Gestalt [dieselbe Verwandtnis] hat es auch mit den wesentlichen Eigenschaften, daß einer Natur Eigenschaften von der andern Natur in abstracto, als ob sie auch derselben andern Natur Eigenschaften wären, nicht können gesagt werden. Darum auch diese Reden falsch und unrecht sind, wenn man sagen wollte: Die menschliche Natur ist die Allmächtigkeit, ist von Ewigkeit. Wie denn auch die Eigenschaften selbst voneinander nicht gesagt werden können, als wenn man sagen wollte: mortalitas est immortalitas et e contra, die Sterblichkeit ist die Unsterblichkeit, und die Unsterblichkeit ist die Sterblichkeit; denn durch solche Reden der Unterschied der Naturen und ihrer Eigenschaften aufgehoben, dieselben miteinander vermischet, eine in die andere verwandelt und also einander exäquiert und gleichgemacht werden.

Weil man aber nicht allein wissen und festiglich glauben soll, daß die angenommene menschliche Natur in der Person Christi ihr Wesen und dieselben natürlichen, wesentlichen Eigenschaften in alle Ewigkeit habe und behalte, sondern vornehmlich daran gelegen und der höchste Trost der Christen

Et hoc ipsum hactenus eruditi in scholis nostris verbis abstracti et concreti indicare et declarare voluerunt, ad quae hic liber etiam paucis verbis respexit, quae verba, quemadmodum haec omnia optime norunt eruditi, in vero et genuino sensu necessario in scholis retineantur oportet. (In Lib. Concordiae [Conc. Trigl., p. 1028].)

Concreta enim eiusmodi vocabula sunt, quae integram Christi personam designant, ut Deus, homo. Abstracta vero sunt nomina, quibus naturae in persona Christi exprimuntur, ut Divinitas, humanitas.

Secundum quam distinctionem recte dicitur in concreto: Deus est homo, homo est Deus. Contra, perperam dicitur in abstracto: Divinitas est humanitas, humanitas est Divinitas.

Eadem est ratio essentialium idiomatum, ita ut unus naturae idiomatica de altera natura in abstracto, quasi alterius naturae idiomatica sint, praedicari nequeant. Quamobrem falsae et erroneae locutiones fuerint, si quis dixerit: Humana natura est omnipotentia, est ab aeterno. Sicut neque ipsa idiomatica de se mutuo praedicari possunt, ut si quis dicere vellet: Mortalitas est immortalitas et contra; propterea quod his loquendi formulis discrimen naturarum et proprietatum tollatur, eadem confundantur, una in alteram convertatur atque ita earum fiat exaequatio.

Quum autem non tantum scire et firmiter credere oporteat assumptam humanam naturam Christi, in persona eiusdem, et substantiam et naturales atque substantiales proprietates suas in omnem aeternitatem retinere, sed etiam plurimum momenti habeat, ac

One of these flashes forth in the miracles, the other sinks beneath injuries [and still there is one single Mediator, God and man]. He is God, because [through this, for this, and because of this, that] in the beginning was the Word, and God was the Word, by whom all things were made. He is man, because [through this, for this, and because of this, that] the Word was made flesh, and because He was made of a woman. Also, because of [to indicate] this unity of the person which is to be understood in both natures, we read that the Son of Man descended from heaven when the Son of God assumed flesh of the Virgin Mary."

And again (cap. 5, fol. 93): "The Son of God is said to have been crucified and buried, although He suffered these things not in His very divinity, by which He is consubstantial with the Father, but in the infirmity of [His assumed] human nature."

So far the words of the two councils, of Ephesus and of Chalcedon, with which also all the other holy fathers agree.

This is precisely what the learned men in our schools have thus far desired to indicate and declare by the words abstract and concrete, to which this book [of Concord in the present instance] also has reference in a few words (see above, p. 1029) [when it is stated]: All of which the learned know well; which words must necessarily be retained in their true sense in the schools.

For concrete terms are words of such a kind as designate the entire person in Christ, such as God, man. But abstract terms are words by which the natures in the person of Christ are understood and expressed, as divinity, humanity.

According to this distinction it is correctly said in concreto: God is man, man is God. On the other hand, it is speaking incorrectly when one says in abstracto: Divinity is humanity, humanity is divinity.

The same rule applies also to the essential attributes, so that the attributes of the one nature cannot be predicated of the other nature in abstracto, as though they were attributes also of the other nature. Therefore the following expressions are [would be] false and incorrect if one were to say: "The human nature is Omnipotence, is from eternity." Just as the attributes themselves cannot be predicated of one another, as if one would say: Mortalitas est immortalitas, et e contra; "Mortality is immortality," and immortality is mortality; for by such expressions the distinction of the natures and their attributes is abolished, they are confounded with one another, changed one into the other, and thus made equal and alike.

But since we must not only know and firmly believe that the assumed human nature in the person of Christ has and retains to all eternity its essence and the natural essential attributes of the same, but it is a matter of especial importance, and the greatest consolation for Christians is comprised therein, that we also know from the revelation of the Holy Scriptures, and without doubt believe darin begriffen, daß wir auch aus Offenbarung der Heiligen Schrift wissen und ungescheitert glauben, in was Majestät solche seine menschliche Natur in und durch die persönliche Vereinigung mit der Tat und Wahrheit eingesetzt, und also derselben persönlich theilhaftig worden, inmaßen solches im Buch der Konfession ausführlich erklärt worden: demnach und daß gleichfalls jedermann sehen möge, daß auch in diesem Stück ermeldetes Buch nicht neue, fremde, selbsterdachte, unerhörte paradoxa und Reden in die Kirche Gottes eingeführt, wird das nachfolgende Verzeichnis zubörderst der Heiligen Schrift und dann auch der alten reinen Kirchenlehrer Zeugnisse, besonders aber der Väter, so in den vier Hauptkonzilien die vornehmsten und Directores derselben gewesen sind, flärllich ausweisen, daraus zu vernehmen, wie dieselben hiezu geredet haben.

Und damit der christliche Leser sich darein desto leichter finden und richten möge, sind dieselben auf etliche unterschiedliche nachfolgende Punkte gesetzt worden:

I.

Erstlich, daß die Heilige Schrift wie auch die Väter, wenn sie von der Majestät reden, welche die menschliche Natur Christi durch die persönliche Vereinigung empfangen hat, sich der Worte communicationis, communionis, participationis, donationis, traditionis, subiectionis, exaltationis, dari etc., daß ist, der Worte: „Mittheilung“, „Gemeinschaft“, „theilhaftig“, „geschenkt und gegeben werden“ usw. gebrauchen.

Dan. 7, 13, 14: Ecce in nubibus coeli quasi filius hominis veniebat etc., et dedit ei potestatem, honorem et regnum. Potestas eius potestas aeterna.

Dan. 7: Und siehe, es kam einer in des Himmels Wolken, wie eines Menschen Sohn, bis zu dem Altar und ward vor denselbigen gebracht; der gab ihm Gewalt, Ehre und Reich, daß ihm alle Völker, Reute und Zungen dienen sollten. Seine Gewalt ist ewig, die nicht vergehet, und sein Königreich hat kein Ende.

Ioh. 13, 3: Sciens, quia omnia dedit ei Pater in manus.

Joh. 13: Jesus wußte, daß ihm der Vater alles in seine Hände gegeben hatte.

Matth. 11, 27: Omnia mihi tradita sunt a Patre meo.

Matth. 28, 18: Data est mihi omnis potestas in coelo et in terra.

Matth. 28: Mir ist gegeben alle Gewalt im Himmel und auf Erden.

Phil. 2, 9, 10: Donavit ei nomen super omne nomen etc.

Phil. 2: Gott hat ihm einen Namen gegeben, der über alle Namen ist, daß in dem Namen Jesu sich beugen sollen alle derer Knie, die im Himmel und auf Erden und unter der Erde sind usw.

Eph. 1, 22: Omnia subiecit sub pedibus eius.

Eph. 1: Der Vater hat alle Dinge unter seine Füße getan. 1 Kor. 15, 27; Hebr. 2, 8.

Ps. 8, 7; 1 Kor. 15; Heb. 2. Phil. 2, 9: Propter quod Deus exaltavit ipsum.

EUSEBIUS, Ἀποδείξις βιβλ. δ. κεφ. ιγ. [Demonstr. Evang., 1. 4, c. 13, p. 169, ed. Paris. 1628]: Ἀλλὰ τὰ μὲν ἐξ αὐτοῦ μεταδίδους (δὲ Λόγος) τῷ ἀνθρώπῳ, τὰ δ' ἐκ τοῦ θνητοῦ μὴ ἀντιλαμβάνων. Καὶ τῆς μὲν ἐκ θεοῦ δυνάμεως τῷ θνητῷ χορηγῶν, τῆς δ' ἐκ τοῦ θνητοῦ μετουσίας οὐκ ἀντεπαγόμενος.

Sed illa quidem a se ipso communicans (δὲ Λόγος) homini, haec vero a mortali ipse non recipiens. Item, mortali quidem potentiam divinam subministrans, a mortali vero ipse non contra in partem aut communitatem adductus.

Idem id [c. 14]: Τοῦτον αὐτὸν (τὸν ἀνθρώπον) ἐκεί τῆς τε παρ' αὐτῷ ζωῆς διδίου καὶ τῆς ἐν Θεότητι καὶ μακαριότητι κοινωνίας ἀζιῶν.

Hunc ipsum interim ad illius vitae aeternae, quam penes se habet, atque ad dignitatis in Divinitate ac beatitudine communitatem assumens.

Das ist: Daß Wort hat den angenommenen Menschen (concretum pro abstracto) würdig gemacht der Gemeinschaft in der Gottheit, des ewigen Lebens und Seligkeit.

summa consolatio Christianis in eo proposita sit, ut secundum revelationem Sacrae Scripturae agnoscamus et indubitata fide amplectamur summam maiestatem, ad quam natura illa humana in et per unionem hypostaticam vere et re ipsa evecta, et cuius personaliter particeps facta est, quae in Libro Concordiae copiose declaratur: ideo et ut similiter quisque videat, etiam hac in parte libri nominati non nova, peregrina, ab hominibus excogitata et inaudita dogmata et phrases in ecclesiam Dei invehit, sequens catalogus testimoniorum cum Scripturae tum veterum purioris ecclesiae doctorum, praecipue vero eorum, qui quatuor oecumenicorum conciliorum antesignani et directores fuerunt, quomodo illi hac de re locuti sint, dilucide ostendet.

Suntque testimonia illa, quo facilius ea invenire et rectius intelligere lector posset, in certa capita distributa, quae sequuntur:

I.

Primum, sacras litteras perinde atque patres, loquentes de maiestate, quam humana natura Christi per unionem personalem accepit, uti verbis communicationis, communionis, participationis, donationis, traditionis, subiectionis, exaltationis, dari etc.

the majesty to which this His human nature has been elevated in deed and truth by the personal union, and of which it thus has become personally participant, as has been extensively explained in the Book of Concord; accordingly, and in order that likewise every one may see that also in this part the book mentioned has introduced no new, strange, self-devised, unheard-of paradoxa and expressions into the Church of God, the following Catalog of Testimonies — first of all from the Holy Scriptures, and then also of the ancient, pure teachers of the Church, especially, however, of those fathers who were most eminent and leaders in the first four Ecumenical Councils — will clearly show, from which it may be understood how they have spoken concerning this subject.

And in order that the Christian reader may the more readily find his way through them and get his bearing, they have been arranged under several distinct heads as follows:

I.

First, that the Holy Scriptures, as also the fathers, when they speak of the majesty which the human nature of Christ has received through the personal union, employ the words communicatio, communio, participatio, donatio, traditio, subiectio, exaltatio, dari, etc., that is, of the words "communication," "communion," "sharing," "bestowed and given," etc.

Dan. 7, 13: Behold, one like the Son of Man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of Days, and they brought Him near before Him; and there was given Him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve Him. His dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and His kingdom that which shall not be destroyed.

John 13, 3: Jesus knowing that the Father had given all things into His hands.

Matt. 11, 27: All things are delivered unto Me of My Father.

Matt. 28, 18: All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth.

Phil. 2, 9: God hath given Him a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth.

[Phil. 2, 9: Wherefore God also hath highly exalted Him.]

Eph. 1, 22: And hath put all things under His feet [Ps. 8, 6]; 1 Cor. 15, 27; Heb. 2, 8.

EUSEBIUS (Demonstr. Evang., l. 4, c. 13, p. 169, ed. Paris, 1628): The Word, however, communicates what is of His own to man, but does not receive, in turn, that which is from the mortal; and He imparts the divine power to the mortal, but is not led, in turn, into a participation of the mortal [the Word of the Father has of Himself communicated what was His to the assumed man; for He has communicated the divine power to the assumed mortal nature, but has not, in turn, assumed for Himself anything out of the mortal nature].

Again: He there makes this very One (man) worthy of the eternal life which is with Him, and of the communion in Deity and blessedness [that is, the Word has made the assumed man (concrete for the abstract) worthy of communion in the Deity, of eternal life and blessedness].

ATHANASIUS in Epistola ad Epictetum [Tom. I, op. p. 589, ed. Colon.] referente etiam Epiphania contra Dimoeritas [Haeres. 77, contra Dimoeritas t. 2, op. p. 1005, ed. Col.]: Ὁὐ διὰ προσθήκης Θεότητος γέγονε σὰρξ ὁ Λόγος, ἀλλ' ἵνα ἡ σὰρξ ἀναστῇ, οὐδ' ἵνα βελτιωθῇ ὁ Λόγος, προήλθεν ἐκ Μαρίας, μᾶλλον γὰρ αὐτῷ [τῷ] ἀνθρωπίνῳ [σώματι] προσθήκη μεγάλη γέγονεν ἐκ τῆς τοῦ Λόγου πρὸς αὐτὸ κοινωνίας τε καὶ ἐνώσεως. Non enim Verbum caro factum est, ut Deitati aliqua accessio fieret, neque ut Verbum in meliorem statum reduceretur, magis vero ipsi humanae naturae accessio magna facta est ex communione et unione Verbi ad humanam naturam.

Das ist: Denn das Wort ist nicht Fleisch [ge]worden, daß dadurch der Gottheit etwas zugeinge, noch auch, daß in einen besseren Stand das Wort gebracht würde, sondern vielmehr ist der menschlichen Natur ein Größeres zugeschlagen aus der Gemeinschaft und Vereinigung des Wortes mit der menschlichen Natur.

EPIPHANIUS, Haeres. 69 [contra Ariomanitas], p. 344 [p. 805, ed. Col.]: Δῆλον διὸ ἡ σὰρξ ἡ ἀπὸ Μαρίας οὐσα καὶ ἐκ τοῦ ἡμετέρου γένους τυγχάνουσα καὶ μετεμορφούτο εἰς δόξαν, δόξαν ἐπικτωμένη τῆς Θεότητος, τὴν τιμὴν τε καὶ τελειότητα καὶ δόξαν τὴν ἐπουράνιον, ἣν μὴ εἶχεν ἡ σὰρξ ἀπ' ἀρχῆς, ἐκταῦθα δὲ λαβοῦσα ἐν τῇ συνένώσει τοῦ Θεοῦ Λόγον.

Caro, quae ex Maria et ex nostro genere erat, transformabatur in gloriam (in transfiguratione) insuper acquirens gloriam Deitatis, honorem, perfectionem et gloriam coelestem, quam caro ab initio non habebat, sed ibi eam in counitione scilicet Dei Verbi accepit.

Das ist: Das Fleisch, welches aus Maria und aus unserm Geschlecht war, ist verklärt, und über das hat es auch erlangt die Glorie der Gottheit, Ehre, Vollkommenheit und himmlische Herrlichkeit, welche es von Anfang nicht hatte, sondern dieselbe in der Vereinigung mit dem Wort empfangen hat.

CYRILLUS, lib. 5. Dialogo [t. 5, p. 562, ed. Paris. 1638]: Quomodo ergo vivificat caro Christi? Et respondet: Secundum unionem cum vivente Verbo, quod et suae naturae bona proprio corpori communia solet facere.

Das ist: Wie macht denn das Fleisch Christi lebendig? Darauf antwortet er: Von wegen der Vereinigung mit dem lebendigen Wort, welches Wort seiner Natur Güter seinem eigenen Leibe pflegt gemein zu machen.

THEODORETUS, Eph. 1 (t. 2, p. 114 [t. 3, p. 297, ed. Paris. 1642]): Quod vero assumpta ex nobis natura eiusdem honoris cum eo, qui assumpsit, sit particeps, ut nulla videatur adorationis differentia, sed per naturam, quae cernitur, adoretur, quae non cernitur, Divinitas, hoc vero omne miraculum superat.

Das ist: Daß aber die Natur, so aus uns ist genommen, ist theilhaftig der Ehre mit dem, der sie angenommen hat, also daß kein Unterschied scheint in der Anrufung, sondern daß durch die Natur, so gesehen wird, angebetet werden soll die Gottheit, die man nicht sieht, das übertrifft zumal alle Wunder.

DAMASCENUS, lib. 3, περὶ ὁδοδοξ. πιστ., cap. 7, et 15 [p. 194]: Καὶ αὕτη μὲν (ἡ θεία φύσις) τῶν οἰκείων αὐχημάτων τῇ σαρκὶ μεταδίδωσι, μένουσα αὐτῇ ἀπαθὴς καὶ τῶν τῆς σαρκὸς παθῶν ἀμέτοχος. Divina natura proprias suas excellentias seu glorificationes carni communicat seu impertit, ipsa vero in se passionum carnis manet experta.

[Das ist:] Die göttliche Natur hat ihre eigene Höheit und Herrlichkeit dem Fleisch gemein gemacht und mitgeteilt; sie aber bleibt an ihr [an sich] selbst des Leidens seines Fleisches überhoben.

Idem cap. 19 [p. 256]: Ἡ δὲ σὰρξ τῇ Θεότητι τοῦ Λόγου ἐνεργούσῃ (κοινωνεῖ) διὰ τὸ ὡς δι' ὄργανον τοῦ σώματος τὰς θείας ἐκτελεῖσθαι ἐνεργείας, καὶ διὰ τὸ εἶναι τὸν ἐνεργούντα θεϊκῶς τὰ ἅμα καὶ ἀνθρωπίνως. Εἰδέναι γὰρ χρὴ, ὡς ὁ ἅγιος αὐτοῦ νοῦς καὶ τὰς φυσικὰς αὐτοῦ ἐνεργεῖ ἐνεργείας etc., κοινωνεῖ δὲ ἐνεργούσῃ τῇ τοῦ Λόγου Θεότητι καὶ διεπούσῃ καὶ κυβερνώσῃ τοῦ πᾶν νοῶν καὶ γινώσκων, καὶ διέπων ὅχως ψιλὸς ἀνθρώπου νοῦς, ἀλλ' ὡς Θεὸς καθ' ὑπόστασιν ἠγνωμένος καὶ Θεοῦ νοῦς χρηματίας.

Caro operanti Deitati Verbi communicat, cum quod divinae operationes per corpus tamquam per organum perficiantur, tum quod unus et idem sit, qui divina et humana operetur. Nosse enim oportet, quod sicuti sancta eius mens etiam naturales suas operationes operatur etc. Et simul communicat etiam Deitati Verbi operanti et gubernanti, ipsa etiam intelligens, cognoscens et disponens totum universum, non ut nuda hominis mens, sed ut Deo secundum hypothesisin counita et Dei mens constituta.

Das ist: Das Fleisch hat Gemeinschaft mit der wirkenden Gottheit, darum daß die göttlichen Wirkungen durch das Werkzeug des Leibes vollbracht worden. Also wirkt auch sein heiliges Gemüt seine natürlichen Wirkungen. Es ist aber auch theilhaftig [ge]worden der Gottheit des Wortes, seiner Wirkung und Regierung, sein vernünftig Gemüt, welches weiß und verordnet alles in der ganzen Welt, nicht als ein bloßes Gemüt eines Menschen, sondern das persönlich mit dem Gemüt Gottes vereinigt und mit demselben eine Person ist.

II.

Daß Christus solche Majestät in der Zeit auch nicht nach der Gottheit oder göttlichen Natur, sondern nach seiner angenommenen menschlichen Natur oder nach dem Fleisch, als Mensch oder als des Menschen Sohn, humanitus, ratione corporis seu humanitatis, propter carnem, quia homo aut filius hominis, empfangen habe:

II.

Christum maiestatem illam in tempore neque secundum Divinitatem seu divinam naturam, sed secundum assumptam naturam vel secundum carnem, ut hominem vel ut filium hominis, humanitus, ratione corporis seu humanitatis, propter carnem, quia homo aut filius hominis est, accepisse:

ATHANASIUS, in a letter to Epictetus (tom. 1, op. p. 589, ed. Colon.), quoted also by Epiphanius against the Dimoeritae (Haeres., 77; Contra Dimoeritas, t. 2, op. p. 1005, ed. Colon.): "Not in order to add to divinity did the Word become flesh, but in order that the flesh might rise up; not that the Word might be made better, He came forth from Mary; for rather was there a great addition to the human (body) from the communion and union with it of the Word." [That is: For the Word did not become flesh in order that thereby something might be added to the divinity, nor that the Word should be brought into a better state, but from the communion and union of the Word with the human nature there has rather been added something greater to the human nature.]

EPIPHANIUS, in Haeresi, 69 (against the Ariomanites), p. 344 (p. 805, ed. Colon.): "It is manifest that the flesh which was of Mary and came of our race was also transformed into glory (in the transfiguration), having acquired, in addition, the glory of the God-head, heavenly honor and perfection and glory, which the flesh did not have from the beginning, but received there in the union with God the Word."

CYRIL, in lib. 5, Dialog. (t. 5, p. 562, ed. Paris, 1638): "How, then, does the flesh of Christ quicken?" And he replies: "According to [On account of] the union with the living Word, which is accustomed to communicate the endowments of His nature to His own body."

THEODORET, Eph. 1 (t. 3, p. 297, ed. Paris, 1642): "However, that the nature assumed from us is participant of the same honor with Him who assumed it, so that no difference in worship appears, but the divinity which is not seen is worshiped through the nature which is seen,—this surpasses every miracle."

DAMASCENUS, in Book 3, Of the Orthodox Faith, chaps. 7, 15: "And this [the divine nature] [communicates or] imparts of its own excellences to the flesh, itself remaining impassible, and not sharing in the passions [sufferings] of the flesh."

Also, chap. 19: The flesh has communion with the operating divinity of the Word, because the divine operations are executed as through the organ of the body, and because He that works both in a divine and human fashion is one. For it is necessary to know that just as His holy mind performs also His natural operations, etc., it participates in the divinity of the Word, that works and arranges and governs, perceiving and knowing and determining everything [the entire universe], not as the mere mind of man, but as being made one in person with God, and as being constituted the mind of God.

II.

That Christ has received this majesty in time, moreover, not according to the divinity, or the divine nature, but according to His assumed human nature, or according to the flesh, as man, or as the Son of Man, humanitus, ratione corporis seu humanitatis, propter carnem, quia homo aut filius hominis [humanly, with respect to His body or humanity, on account of the flesh, because He is man or the Son of Man]:

Heb. 1, 3: Facta purgatione peccatorum per se ipsum, sedet ad dexteram maiestatis in excelsis.

Hebr. 1: Sientmal er hat gemacht die Reinigung unserer Sünden durch sich selbst, hat er sich gesetzt zu der Rechten der Majestät in der Höhe.

Heb. 2, 8. 9: Videmus Iesum propter passionem mortis gloria et honore coronatum et constitutum super omnia opera manuum Dei et omnia ei subiecta sub pedibus eius.

Hebr. 2: Jetzt aber sehen wir noch nicht, daß ihm das alles untertan sei. Den aber, der eine kleine Zeit der Engel gemangelt hat, sehen wir, daß es Jesus ist, durch Leiden des Todes getränkt mit Preis und Ehren.

Luc. 22, 69: Ex hoc erit filius hominis sedens a dexteris virtutis Dei.

Lut. 22: Von nun an wird des Menschen Sohn sitzen zur rechten Hand der Kraft Gottes.

Luc. 1, 32: Et dabit ei Dominus Deus sedem David patris; et regnabit in aeternum, et regni eius non erit finis.

Lut. 1: Und Gott der Herr wird ihm den Stuhl seines Vaters David geben; und er wird ein König sein über das Haus Jakob ewiglich, und seines Königreichs wird kein Ende sein.

Ioh. 5, 26. 27: Dedit Filio habere vitam in se ipso et potestatem dedit ei etiam iudicium facere, quia filius hominis est. [In der deutschen Concordia von 1580 sowie auch in der lateinischen von 1584 folgt diese Stelle dem nächsten Zitat aus Athanasius.]

Joh. 5: Wie der Vater das Leben hat in ihm selber, also hat er dem Sohne gegeben, das Leben zu haben in ihm selber, und hat ihm Macht gegeben, auch das Gericht zu halten, darum daß er des Menschen Sohn ist.

ATHANASIUS citante Theodoro, Dialogo 2, p. 330: Όσα οὖν λέγει ἡ γραφή, οὗ ἐλαβὲν ὁ Υἱὸς καὶ ἐδοξάσθη, διὰ τὴν ἀνθρωπότητα αὐτοῦ λέγει, οὐ τὴν Θεότητα. Quaecunque Scriptura dicit Christum in tempore accepisse, propter humanitatem dicit, non propter Divinitatem.

Athanasius: Was die Heilige Schrift sagt, daß Christus in der Zeit empfangen habe, das sagt sie um der menschlichen und nicht um der göttlichen Natur willen.

ATHANASIUS, Oratione contra Arianos 2 et 4 [f. 347 et 490 sq. 492, ed. Colon. 1686]: Scriptura non intelligit substantiam Verbi exaltatam, sed ad humanitatem eius hoc spectat et propter carne exaltari dicitur. Quum enim ipsius sit corpus, merito ipse ut homo, ratione corporis, humanitas exaltari et accipere memoratur, eo quod corpus illa recipiat, quae Verbum semper possidebat, secundum suam ex Patre Deitatem et perfectionem. Dicit igitur se potestatem accepisse ut hominem, quam semper habet ut Deus. Dicitque: „Glorifica me“, qui alios glorificat, ut ostendat carnem se habere istarum rerum indigam. Ac proinde carne suae humanitatis hanc glorificationem accipiente, ita loquitur, quasi ipse eam accepisset.

Illud enim ubique animadvertendum, nihil eorum, quae dicit se accepisse, in tempore scilicet, ita se accepisse, quasi non habuisset; habebat enim illa utpote semper ut Deus et Verbum. Nunc autem dicit humanitas se accepisse, ut carne eius in ipso accipiente in posterum ea ex carne illius in nos firmiter possidenda traderentur. (p. 250.)

Das ist: Die Heilige Schrift versteht nicht, daß die Substanz des Wortes sei erhöht, sondern das geht auf seine Menschheit, und um des Fleisches willen wird gesagt, daß er erhöht sei. Denn weil es sein Leib ist, darum wird billig gesagt, daß er als ein Mensch um des Leibes und seiner Menschheit willen erhöht ist, und daß er solches empfangen darum, daß sein Leib solche Dinge empfängt, die er als das Wort allezeit besitzen hat nach seiner Gottheit und Vollkommenheit, welche er von dem Vater hat. Darum sagt er, daß er Gewalt empfangen habe als Mensch, die er allezeit hat als Gott, und spricht: „Verkläre mich“, so er doch andere verklärt; damit er aber anzeigt, daß er Fleisch habe, das solcher Verklärung bedarf. Darum weil das Fleisch seiner menschlichen Natur nach solche Verklärung empfangen hat, so redet er also, gleich als wenn er sie empfangen hätte.

Denn das soll man allenthalben (in der Heiligen Schrift) wohl merken, daß Christo derer Dinge keines gemangelt habe, die er [von denen er] sagt, daß er sie in der Zeit empfangen hat, als hätte er sie nicht zuvor gehabt; denn er hat sie allezeit als Gott und das Wort; jedoch aber sagt er, daß er sie nach der Menschheit empfangen habe, auf daß, nachdem sie sein Fleisch in ihm empfangen hat, dieselben auch hierfür aus seinem Fleisch uns zu besitzen gegeben werden.

Idem: De Suscepta Humanitate, contra Apollinarium (p. 540 [p. 603 et 611, ed. Colon. 1686]): Quum Petrus dicit, Iesum factum Dominum et Christum a Deo, non de Divinitate eius loquitur, sed de humanitate. Verbum eius semper erat Dominus, neque post crucem primum factus est Dominus, sed humanitatem eius Divinitas fecit Dominum et Christum.

Und abermals: Wenn Petrus sagt, daß Jesus von Gott zum Herrn und Christ gemacht sei, redet er nicht von seiner Gottheit, sondern von der Menschheit. Denn sein Wort allezeit ein Herr war. Und ist nicht erst nach seinem Leiden zum Herrn gemacht worden, sondern seine Menschheit hat die Gottheit [sondern seine Gottheit hat die Menschheit] zum Herrn und Christ gemacht.

Item (p. 534): Quaecunque Scriptura dicit Filium accepisse, ratione corporis accepta intelligit, corpusque illud esse primitias ecclesiae. Primum igitur Dominus suum corpus excitavit et exaltavit, posthac autem membra sui corporis. Quibus verbis Athanasius explicavit, quod paulo post ad universam ecclesiam etiam suo modo accommodavit.

Und abermals: Alles, das die Heilige Schrift sagt, daß der Sohn empfangen habe, das versteht sie, daß er es empfangen habe nach dem Leibe, und daß solcher Leib sei die Erklänge der Kirche. Darum hat der Herr erstlich seinen Leib auferweckt und erhöht, danach aber die Glieder

Luke 1, 32, 33: The Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of His father David; and He shall reign over the house of Jacob forever, and of His kingdom there shall be no end.

John 5, 26, 27: He hath given to the Son to have life in Himself, and hath given Him authority to execute judgment also, because He is the Son of Man.

ATHANASIUS, quoted by Theodoret, Dialog 2, p. 330: "Now, whatever Scripture says that the Word received [in time], and as to whatever He was glorified, it says on account of His humanity, and not on account of His divinity.

ATHANASIUS, in the Oration against the Arians, 2 and 4 (f. 347. 490 f. 492, ed. Colon., 1686): "Scripture does not mean that the substance of the Word has been exalted, but this refers to His humanity, and He is said to be exalted on account of the flesh. For since it is His body, He Himself is properly said as man to be exalted and to receive something with respect to His body, according to humanity, because the body receives those things which the Word always possessed according to His own deity and perfection from the Father. He says, therefore, that as a man He received the power, which as God He always has. And He who glorifies others says, 'Glorify Me,' in order to show that He had a flesh that lacked such things. And, therefore, when the flesh of His humanity receives this glorification, He so speaks as though He Himself had received it.

For we must bear in mind everywhere [in the Holy Scriptures] that none of those things which He says that He received, namely, in time, He received in such a way as though He had not had them; for, being God and the Word, naturally He had those things always. But now He says that He received them according to humanity, so that, His flesh in Himself receiving them, He might in future hand them over from out of His flesh to us to be firmly possessed."

The same, On the Assumed Humanity, against Apollinarius (pp. 603 and 611, ed. Colon., 1686): "When Peter says that Jesus was made of God Lord and Christ, He speaks not of His divinity, but of His humanity. His Word always was Lord, neither did He become Lord first after the cross, but His divinity made the humanity Lord and Christ."

Also: "Whatever Scripture says that the Son has received, it understands as having been received with respect to His body, and that that body is the first-fruits of the Church. Accordingly, God raised up and exalted His own body first, but afterwards the Paris.]: Quod Dominus celebratur et accipit nomen super omne nomen; item: Data est mihi omnis potestas in coelo et in terra; ego vivo propter Patrem; glorifica me ea gloria, quam ante mundum habui apud te etc., εἰς τὴν ἐνανθρώπησην καὶ οὐκ εἰς τὴν Θεότητα ταῦτα ποιεῖν δεῖ; hoc est: illa intelligere oportet de incarnatione et non de Deitate.

Das ist: Daß der Herr gerühmt wird, daß er empfangen habe einen Namen über alle Namen; item, daß er sagt: „Mir ist gegeben alle Gewalt im Himmel und Erden; ich lebe um des Vaters willen; verkläre mich mit der Klarheit, die ich habe gehabt bei dir“ usw.: das muß man verstehen von der Menschwerdung und nicht von der Gottheit.

AMBROSIIUS, lib. 5 De Fide, cap. 6 (t. 2, p. 109): Didicisti, quod omnia sibi ipsi subicere possit secundum operationem utique Deitatis: disce nunc, quod secundum carnem omnia subiecta accipiat, sicut scriptum est Eph. 1: Secundum carnem igitur omnia ipsi subiecta traduntur.

Das ist: Du hast gelernt, daß er ihm alles unterwerfen kann, und das nach der Wirkung der Gottheit. So lerne nun das, daß er auch nach dem Fleisch alles unterworfen empfangt, wie geschrieben steht Eph. 1. Darum wird gelehrt, daß nach dem Fleisch ihm alles unterworfen sei. [Dieser letzte Satz: „Darum — sei“ ist, wie der verschiedene Druck in der Ausgabe des Konfordienbuchs von 1580 andeutet, nicht ein Teil des Zitats aus Ambrosius, sondern eine Folgerung aus demselben. Dasselbe gilt im folgenden Zitat von den Worten „nach seiner Menschheit“.]

Idem lib. 5, cap. 2 (p. 99): Non enim Deus suae sedis apostolis dat consortium; Christo vero secundum humanitatem datur consortium divinae sedis.

OECUMENIUS ex Chrysost., Ebr. 1 [t. 2, op. p. 324, ed. 1631]: Ὡς γὰρ Θεὸς ὁ Υἱὸς αἰώνιον ἔχει τὸν θρόνον. Ὁ θρόνος σου, ὁ Θεὸς φησὶν, εἰς τὸν αἰῶνα τοῦ αἰῶνος, οὐ γὰρ μετὰ τὸν σταυρὸν καὶ τὸ πάθος ταύτης ὡς Θεὸς τῆς τιμῆς ἡξιώθη, ἀλλ' ἔλαβεν ὡς ἀνθρώπος, ὅπερ εἶπεν ὡς Θεός. Et paulo post: Ὡς ἀνθρώπος τοίνυν ἀκούει: κάθου ἐν δεξιῶν μου. Ὡς γὰρ Θεὸς αἰώνιον ἔχει τὸ κράτος. Quatenus Deus est Filius, aeternum habet thronum. Thronus tuus, inquit Deus, in saeculum saeculi. Non enim post crucem et passionem hoc honore ut Deus dignus habitus fuit, sed accepit ut homo, quod habebat ut Deus. Et paulo post: Ut homo igitur audit: Sede a dexteris meis. Ut enim Deus aeternum habet imperium.

Das ist: Dieweil er Gott ist, hat er einen ewigen Thron; aber was er als Gott hatte, das hat er empfangen als Mensch. Darum hört er als ein Mensch, das gesagt ist: „Setze dich zu meiner Rechten.“ Denn als Gott hat er eine ewige Gewalt und Reich.

Und abermals: Er hat als ein Mensch gebeten [um] die Glorie, welche er als Gott allezeit gehabt, und wird solches nicht von ihm gesagt, als ob er jemals seiner eigenen Glorie und Herrlichkeit gemangelt hätte, sondern darum, daß er seinen eigenen Tempel in die Herrlichkeit führen wollte, die er als Gott allezeit gehabt hat.

Und abermals: „Sehe dich zu meiner Rechten“: das ist nach seiner Menschheit geredet. Denn wie er als Gott ein ewig Reich hat, also hat er solche Gewalt als Mensch empfangen, die er als Gott hatte. Darum hört er auch, daß zu ihm gesagt ist: „Sehe dich zu meiner Rechten“; denn als Gott hat er ein ewig Reich.

Idem Heb. 1 (t. 2, p. 154): Christus semper accepit ab angelis cultum et adorationem; erat enim semper Deus. Iam autem adorant ipsum etiam ut hominem.

LEO, Epist. 23 (fol. 99) [f. 261 et 317, ed. Lugd. 1700], tractans locum Eph. 1 inquit: Dicant adversarii veritatis [„Sacramentarii“, steht hier am Rand], quando omnipotens Pater, vel secundum quam naturam Filium suum super omnia evexerit, vel cui substantiae cuncta subiecerit. Deitati enim, ut Creatori, semper subiecta fuerunt. Huic si addita potestas, si exaltata sublimitas, minor erat provehente, nec habebat divitias eius naturae, cuius indiguit largitate; sed talia sentientem in societatem suam Arius rapit.

So sagen uns nun die Widersprecher der Wahrheit, wann der allmächtige Vater und nach welcher Natur er seinen Sohn über alles erhoben habe, oder welcher substantia (oder Natur) er alles unterworfen habe. Denn der Gottheit, als dem Schöpfer, ist allezeit alles unterworfen gewesen. Wenn diesem seine Gewalt gemehrt und größer gemacht, wenn seine Höhe noch mehr erhöht ist, so ist er kleiner gewesen, denn der ihn erhöht hat, und hat nicht gehabt die Reichtümer der Natur, deren Mildigkeit er bedurft hat; aber die also gekannt sind, die nimmt Arius in seine Gesellschaft auf.

Idem, Epist. 83 (fol. 134): Licet Deitatis et humanitatis in Christo una prorsus eademque persona: exaltationem tamen et nomen super omne nomen ad eam intelligimus pertinere formam, quae ditanda erat tantae glorificationis augmento. Non enim per incarnationem aliquid decesserat Verbo, quod ei Patris munere redderetur. Forma autem servi humana est humilitas, quae in gloriam divinae potestatis erecta est, ut nec sine homine divina nec sine Deo agerentur humana.

Und abermals: Wiewohl die Gottheit und Menschheit in Christo eine Person ist, so verstehen wir doch, daß die Erhöhung und der Name über alle Namen gehört zu der Gestalt, welche mit Herrlichkeit sollte reich gemacht werden. Denn durch die Menschwerdung ist dem Wort nichts abgegangen, das ihm als des Vaters Gabe wiedergegeben wäre. Sondern die Anechtsgestalt ist menschliche Demut, welche zur göttlichen Herrlichkeit ist erhoben, daß ohne die menschliche Natur nichts Göttliches und ohne die göttliche Natur nichts Menschliches gehandelt würde.

Ibidem: Quidquid in tempore accepit Christus, secundum hominem accepit, cui, quae non habuit, conferuntur. Nam secundum potentiam Verbi indifferenter omnia, quae habet Pater, etiam Filius habet.

Und abermals: Alles, was Christus in der Zeit empfangen hat, das hat er als Mensch empfangen, dem gegeben ist, das er zuvor nicht hatte. Denn nach der Kraft des Wortes hat er ohne Unterschied alles, was der Vater hat, und was der Sohn hat.

VIGILIUS, lib. 5, Contra Eutychen [p. 66 sq., ed. Divion. 1664. 4]: Divina natura non indiget honoribus sublimari, dignitatis profectibus augeri, potestatem coeli et terrae obedientiae merito accipere. Secundum carnis naturam igitur illa adeptus est, qui secundum naturam Verbi horum nihil eguit aliquando. Num quid enim potestatem et dominium creaturae suae Conditor non habebat, ut novissimis temporibus muneris gratia his potiretur?

Das ist: Die göttliche Natur bedarf nicht, daß man sie mit Ehren erhebe, mit Zunehmen der Würde vermehre, oder daß sie die Gewalt im Himmel und [auf] Erden erst durch das Verdienst des Gehorsams erlange; darum hat er (Christus) solches nach der Natur des Fleisches erlangt, welcher nach der Natur des Wortes derer Dinge nichts jemals bedurft hat. Denn sollte der Schöpfer die Gewalt und Herrschaft über die Creatur nicht gehabt haben, daß er in den letzten Zeiten solche erst aus Gnaden erlangte?

NICEPHORUS, lib. 1, cap. 36, fol. 86: Christus a discipulis in Galileae monte conspicitur, et ibi a Patre summam potestatem coeli et terrae sibi, iuxta humanitatem scilicet, traditam esse confirmat.

Das ist: Christus wird von seinen Jüngern auf dem Berge in Galiläa gesehen und bestätigt daselbst, daß ihm vom Vater die höchste Gewalt im Himmel und [auf] Erden, nämlich nach der Menschheit, gegeben sei.

III.

Daß die Heilige Schrift zubörderst und dann auch die heiligen Väter der alten reinen Kirche von diesem Geheimnis auch reden per vocabula abstracta, das ist, mit solchen Worten, welche ausdrücklich die menschliche Natur in Christo bezeichnen und sich auf dieselbe in der persönlichen Vereinigung [be]ziehen, als daß die menschliche Natur solche Majestät mit der Tat und Wahrheit empfangen habe und gebrauche:

Ioh. 6, 54. 55: Caro mea est cibus et sanguis meus vere est potus. Qui manducat meam carnem et bibit meum sanguinem, habet vitam aeternam.

Das ist: Mein Fleisch ist die rechte Speise, und mein Blut ist der rechte Trank. Wer mein Fleisch isst und trinkt mein Blut, der hat das ewige Leben.

III.

Cum Sacram Scripturam tum sanctos veteris et purioris ecclesiae patres de hoc mysterio etiam loqui per vocabula abstracta, hoc est, per eiusmodi nomina, quae expresse naturam humanam in Christo designant et ad illam in unione personali respiciunt, quod videlicet natura humana talem maiestatem realiter et revera acceperit eaque utatur:

nal dominion, so as man He has received what He had as God. As man, therefore, He hears [what is said to Him], 'Sit at My right hand.' For as God He has eternal dominion."

The same, on Heb. 1 (t. 2, p. 154): "Christ always received from the angels worship and adoration, for He always was God. But now they are adoring Him also as man."

LEO, Epist. 23 (fol. 99; Ep. [23 and 83] 46 and 97, ff. 261 and 317, ed. Lugd., 1700), treating of Eph. 1, says: "Let the adversaries of the truth declare when or according to what nature the almighty Father raised His Son above all things, or to what substance [nature] He subjected all things. For to the Deity, as to the Creator, all things have always been subject. If power was added to Him, if Sublimity was exalted, it was inferior to Him who exalted, and did not have the riches of that nature of whose liberality it stood in need. But a person holding such views Arius receives into his fellowship."

The same, Epist. 83 (fol. 134): "Although in Christ there is absolutely one and the same person of the divinity and the humanity, nevertheless we understand that exaltation and the name above every name pertain to that form which was to be enriched by the increase of so great a glorification. For by incarnation nothing had been withdrawn from the Word which would be returned to it by the gift of the Father. But the form of a servant is human humility, which has been exalted to the glory of divine power, so that divine things were not to be done without the man, nor human things without God."

In the same place: "Whatever Christ has received in time He has received as man, upon whom are conferred those things which He did not have. For, according to the power of the Word, the Son also has all things that the Father has, without a difference."

VIGILIUS, lib. 5, Against Eutyches (Ep. 66 sq., ed. Divion., 1664.4): "The divine nature does not need to be elevated to honors, to be increased by advancements of dignity, to receive the power of heaven and earth by the merit of obedience. Therefore, according to the nature of the flesh He acquired these things who according to the nature of the Word never lacked any of them. For had the Creator no power and dominion over His creature, that in the last times He should obtain them as a gift?"

NICEPHORUS, lib. 1, cap. 36 (fol. 86): "Christ is seen by His disciples on the mountain in Galilee, and there He affirms that the highest power of heaven and earth has been delivered Him, namely, according to humanity."

III.

That, first of all, the Holy Scriptures, and then also the holy fathers of the ancient pure Church, speak concerning this mystery also per vocabula abstracta, that is, in such words as expressly indicate the human nature in Christ, and refer to the same in the personal union, namely, that the human nature actually and truly has received and uses such majesty:

John 6, 54. 55: Whoso eateth My flesh and drinketh My blood hath eternal life. . . . For My flesh is meat indeed, and My blood is drink indeed.

Das ist: Das Blut Jesu Christi, des Sohnes Gottes, macht uns rein von aller Sünde.

Heb. 9, 14: Sanguis Christi, qui per Spiritum Sanctum se ipsum obtulit immaculatum Deo, emundat conscientiam nostram ab operibus mortis [mortuis] ad serviendum Deo viventi.

Das ist: Das Blut Christi, der sich selbst ohne Wandel durch den Heiligen Geist Gott geopfert hat, reinigt unser Gewissen von den toten Werken, zu dienen dem lebendigen Gott.

Das ist: Nehmet, esset; das ist mein Leib. Trinket alle daraus; das ist mein Blut des neuen Testaments.

EUSTACHIUS [Eustathius] citante Theodoreto, Dialogo 2 (p. 40): Ἐνεῦθεν τοίνυν ἐπὶ θρόνον προέγραψεν αὐτὸν ἅγιον καθέζεσθαι, δηλῶν, οὗ συνδρογὸς ἀποδέδεικται τῷ θειοτάτῳ Πνεύματι, διὰ τὸν οἰκοῦντα Θεὸν ἐν αὐτῷ διηγεσῶς.

Huic igitur praedixit fore, ut sederet (Christus homo) in throno sancto, significans sessurum eum in eodem throno cum divinissimo Spiritu, propter Deum inhabitantem in ipso inseparabiliter.

Das ist: Die menschliche Natur in Christo sitzt auf einem Thron oder Stuhl mit seiner Gottheit, darum daß Gott unzertrennlich in derselben menschlichen Natur wohnt.

Das ist: Der Mensch Christus, der an Weisheit, Alter und Gnade zugenommen, hat das Regiment oder Herrschaft über alle Dinge empfangen.

Idem ibidem: Christus ipso corpore ad proprios venit apostolos dicens: Data est mihi omnis potestas in coelo et in terra; quam potestatem accepit extrinsecus templum et non Deus, qui templum illud praecipua pulchritudine aedificavit.

Das ist: Christus ist nach seiner Auferstehung mit seinem eigenen Leibe zu seinen erwählten Aposteln [ge]kommen und hat gesagt: „Mir ist gegeben alle Gewalt im Himmel und auf Erden“; welche Gewalt der äußerliche Tempel des ewigen Wortes empfangen hat und nicht Gott (nämlich nach seiner Gottheit), der denselben Tempel (seines Leibes) mit solchem vornehmen Schmud erbaut und geziert hat.

ATHANASIUS de Ariana et Catholica Confessione [tom. 2, op. p. 579, ed. Colon.]: Deus non est mutatus in humanam carnem vel substantiam, sed in se ipso, quam assumpsit, gloriificabat naturam, ut humana, infirma et mortalis caro atque natura divinam profecerit in gloriam, ita ut omnem potestatem in coelo et in terra habeat, quam, antequam a Verbo assumeretur, non habebat.

Das ist: Gott ist nicht verwandelt in das menschliche Fleisch oder Substanz, sondern hat in ihm [sich] selber die Natur verklärt, die er an sich genommen hat, daß das menschliche, schwache, sterbliche Fleisch und Natur göttliche Herrlichkeit erlangte, also daß es alle Gewalt im Himmel und Erden hat, welche es nicht hatte, ehe es von dem Wort angenommen worden.

Das ist: St. Paulus an die Philipper am 2. Kapitel redet von seinem Tempel, welcher ist sein Leib. Denn nicht der Allerhöchste, sondern das Fleisch wird erhöht. Und seinem Fleisch hat er einen Namen gegeben über alle Namen, daß in dem Namen Jesu sich beugen sollen alle Knie, und alle Zungen bekennen, daß Jesus Christus sei der Herr in der Glorie Gottes des Vaters. Und hängt eine gemeine Regel daran: Wenn die heilige Schrift redet von der Verklärung Christi, so redet sie von dem Fleisch Christi, das solche Herrlichkeit empfangen hat. Und was die Schrift sagt, daß der Sohn empfangen habe, das redet sie von wegen der Menschheit und nicht der Gottheit. Als, wenn der Apostel sagt: „In Christo wohnt alle Fülle der Gottheit leibhaftig“, das ist zu verstehen, daß sie im Fleisch Christi wohnen.

Idem citante Theodoreto, Dialogo 2 (tom. 3, p. 286): Κάθου ἐκ δεξιῶν μου, εἰς τὸ κυριακὸν σῶμα λέλεκται. Item: Τὸ σῶμα τοῖνυν ἐστίν, ᾧ λέγει, κάθου ἐκ δεξιῶν μου. Corpus est, cui dicit Dominus: Sede a dexteris meis.

ATHANASIUS, De Incarnatione, sicut citatur apud Cyrillum in defensione anathematismi 8 et in libro De Recta Fide ad Reginas: Si quis dicat, inadorabilem Domini nostri carnem, ut hominis, et non adorandam ut Domini et Dei carnem, hunc anathematizat sancta et catholica ecclesia.

Das ist: So jemand sagte, das Fleisch Christi, so nicht anzubeten als eines Menschen Fleisch, daß es auch als des Herrn und Gottes Fleisch nicht angebetet werden solle, den verflucht die heilige und katholische Kirche.

1 John 1, 7: The blood of Jesus Christ, His Son, cleanseth us from all sin.

Heb. 9, 14: The blood of Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered Himself without spot to God, purges your conscience from dead works to serve the living God.

Matt. 26, 26—28: Take, eat; this is My body. . . . Drink ye all of it; for this is My blood of the new testament.

EUSTACHIUS, quoted by Theodoret, Dialog 2 (p. 40): "Therefore he prophesied that He [Christ the man, the human nature of Christ] would sit upon a holy throne, signifying that He has made Himself known as sharing the throne with the most Divine Spirit, on account of God's dwelling inseparably in Him."

The same, quoted in Gelasius: "The man Christ, who increased in wisdom, age, and favor, received the dominion of all things."

The same, in the same place: "Christ, in His very body, came to His apostles, saying: 'All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth'; which power the external temple received, and not God [namely, according to His divinity], who built that temple [of His body] of extraordinary beauty."

ATHANASIUS, On the Arian and the Catholic Confession (t. 2, op. p. 579, ed. Colon.): "God was not changed into human flesh or substance, but in Himself glorified the nature which He assumed, so that the human, weak, and mortal flesh and nature advanced to [obtained] divine glory, so as to have all power in heaven and in earth, which it did not have before it was assumed by the Word."

The same (l. c., pp. 597 and 603), On the Assumed Humanity, against Apollinarius (p. 530): "Paul, Phil. 2, speaks of a [His] temple which is His body. For not He who is the Highest, but the flesh, is exalted; and to his flesh He gave a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is the Lord, to the glory of the Father. And he adds a general rule: When Scripture speaks of the glorification of Christ, it speaks of the flesh, which has received glory. And whatever Scripture says that the Son has received, it declares with respect to His humanity, and not to His divinity: as, when the apostle says that in Christ dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily, we must understand that this fulness dwells in the flesh of Christ."

The same, quoted by Theodoret, Dialog 2 (t. 3, p. 286): "'Sit on My right hand,' has been said to the Lord's body." Also: "It is therefore the body to which He says, 'Sit on My right hand.'"

ATHANASIUS, On the Incarnation, as quoted in Cyril in his Defense of the 8th Anathema, and in his book, On the True Faith to the Queens: "If any one says that the flesh of our Lord as that of a man is inadorable, and is not to be worshiped as the flesh of the Lord and God, him the Holy Catholic Church anathematizes."

Idem [De Susc. Human., p. 603, ed. Colon.]: Quaecunque Scriptura dicit Filium accepisse, ratione corporis accepta intelligit, corpusque illud esse primitias ecclesiae. Primum igitur Dominus suum corpus excitavit et exaltavit, posthac autem et membra sui corporis.

Das ist: Alles, was die Schrift sagt, daß der Sohn empfangen habe, das versteht sie, daß es nach dem Leibe empfangen sei, und derselbe Leib sei die Erstlinge der Kirche. Darum hat der Herr erstlich seinen Leib erweckt und erhöht, danach aber auch die Glieder seines Leibes.

HILARIUS, lib. 9 (p. 130 [120. 137]): Ut ita homo Iesus maneret in gloria Dei Patris, si in Verbi gloriam caro esset unita, et gloriam Verbi caro assumpta teneret. (Concretum pro abstracto.)

Das ist: Daß also der Mensch Jesus bliebe in der Herrlichkeit Gottes des Vaters, wenn das Fleisch vereinigt wäre in die Glorie des Vaters, und das Fleisch die Herrlichkeit des Vaters hätte.

EUSEBIUS EMISSENUS, in Homilia Feria Sexta post Pascha (Feria 6. paschatos in homiliis 5. patrum, p. 297): Qui secundum divinitatem semper, simul cum Patre et Spiritu Sancto, omnium rerum potestatem habuit, nunc etiam secundum humanitatem omnium rerum potestatem accepit, ut homo ille, qui nuper passus est, coelo et terrae dominetur, quin hic et ibi facit, quidquid vult.

Das ist: Der nach der Gottheit allzeit, zugleich mit dem Vater und Heiligem Geist, alle Gewalt über alles hatte, derselbe hat jetzt auch nach der Menschheit alle Gewalt über alles empfangen, auf daß eben der Mensch, welcher neulich gelitten hat, über Himmel und Erde regiere und hier und dort tue, was er will.

GREGORIUS NYSSENUS citante Gelasio et Theodoro, Dialogo 2: Τῇ δεξιᾷ οὖν τοῦ Θεοῦ ὑποθήκε· τίς οὖν ὑπόθηξ; ὁ ταπεινός ἢ ὁ ὑψιστός; τί δὲ τὸ ταπεινόν, εἰ μὴ τὸ ἀνθρώπινον; τί δὲ ἄλλο παρὰ τὸ Θεῖον εἶναι ὁ ὑψιστός; ἀλλὰ μὲν ὁ Θεὸς ὑποθήκει οὐ δεῖται ὑψιστός ὢν, τὸ ἀνθρώπινον ἄρα ὁ ἀπόστολος ὑποθήκει λέγει. Ὑποθήκει δὲ διὰ τοῦ Κυρίου καὶ Χριστοῦ γενέσθαι, οὐκοῦν οὐ τὴν προαιώνιον ὑπαρξίν τοῦ Κυρίου διὰ τοῦ ἐποίητος παρίστηναι ὁ ἀπόστολος, ἀλλὰ τὴν τοῦ ταπεινοῦ πρὸς τὸ ὑψηλὸν μεταποιῆσαι τὴν ἐκ δεξιῶν τοῦ Θεοῦ γεγεννημένην. Et paulo post: Οὐ ἡ δεξιὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ ἡ ποιητικὴ τῶν ὄντων τῶν πάντων, ἥτις ἐστὶν ὁ Κύριος, δι' οὗ τὰ πάντα ἐγένετο καὶ οὐ χωρὶς ὑπέστη τῶν γεγονότων οὐδὲν, αὐτὴ τὸν ἐνοῦντα πρὸς αὐτὴν ἀνθρώπον εἰς τὸ ἴδιον ἀνήγαγεν ὕψος διὰ τῆς ἐνώσεως.

Hoc est (Apud Theodoretum, t. 2, p. 333): Dextera igitur Dei exaltatus (Act. 2, 33). Quis igitur exaltatus est, humilisne an altissimus? Quid autem est humile nisi humanum? Quid vero aliud praeter Divinitatem appellatione altissimi significatur? At Deus exaltatione non indiget, quum sit altissimus. Humanam igitur naturam exaltatam esse dicit apostolus, exaltatam vero, quia Dominus et Christus factus est (homo). Non igitur aeternam essentiam Domini verbo fecit exprimit apostolus, sed humilis naturae evectionem ad summam celsitudinem, videlicet ad dexteram Dei. Et paulo post: Quia dextera Dei, fabricatrix omnium rerum, quae est ille Dominus, per quem omnia facta sunt, et sine quo nihil eorum, quae facta sunt, subsistit, haec ipsa unitum sibi hominem ad propriam extulit celsitudinem per unionem.

Das ist: Gott bedarf's nicht, daß er erhöht werde, diemeil er der Allerhöchste ist. Darum versteht St. Petrus, daß die Menschheit Christi erhöht sei. Sie ist aber also erhöht, daß er sie zum Herrn und Christ gemacht hat. Mit welchen Worten der Apostel nicht die Gottheit hat anzeigen wollen, sondern daß die menschliche Natur erhoben sei in die Höhe, welche ist zur Rechten Gottes. Denn die Rechte Gottes, welche alles erschaffen hat, und die der Herr selbst ist, dieselbe Rechte Gottes hat den mit ihr vereinigten Menschen in seine eigene Höhe durch die Vereinigung gesetzt.

BASILIIUS MAGNUS, Contra Eunomium, lib. 2, p. 661: Κύριον καὶ Χριστὸν ὁ Θεὸς ἐποίησε τοῦτον τὸν Ἰησοῦν, ὃν ὑμεῖς ἐσταυρώσατε, τῇ δεικτικῇ φωνῇ μονονοῦχι πρὸς τὸ ἀνθρώπινον αὐτοῦ καὶ ὁραόμενον πᾶσι προδήλως ἐπεριδόμενος. Et paulo post: Ὡστε δὲ εἰπὼν Κύριον αὐτὸν καὶ Χριστὸν ὁ Θεὸς ἐποίησε, τὴν κατὰ πάντων ἀρχὴν καὶ δεσποτείαν λέγει τὴν παρὰ τοῦ Πατρὸς ἐπιτραπέισαν αὐτῷ etc.

Petrus Act. 2 inquit: Dominum et Christum fecit Deus hunc Iesum, quem vos crucifixistis, demonstrativa voce humanae et omnibus visibili ipsius naturae palam propemodum incumbens seu innitens. Et paulo post: Quamobrem inquires, quod Deus Dominum et Christum ipsum fecerit, principatum et dominium super omnia a Patre ipsi commissum dicit.

Das ist: Wenn Petrus in der Apostelgeschichte sagt: „Diesen Jesus, den ihr gekreuzigt habt, hat Gott zum Herrn gemacht“, hat er mit dem Wort „diesen“ seine Menschheit anzeigen wollen und sagt, daß ihr (der Menschheit) die Herrschaft und Regierung befohlen sei.

EPIPHANIIUS, Contra Ariomanitas (p. 327 [tom. 1, f. 728, ed. Paris. 1638]): Τοῦτον τὸν Ἰησοῦν, ὃν ἐσταυρώσατε, ἵνα μὴ παραλειφθῇ ἡ ἀγία ἐνοαρκος οἰκονομία ἀπὸ τοῦ ἀπαθούς καὶ ἀκτίστου Λόγου, ἀλλὰ συνενωθῇ ἅνω τῷ ἀκτίστῳ Λόγῳ. Διὰ τοῦτο καὶ Κύριον καὶ Χριστὸν ὁ Θεὸς ἐποίησε τὸ ἐκ Μαρίας συλλεφθὲν, τὸ ἐν Θεότητι συνενωθὲν.

Hoc est: Hunc igitur Iesum, quem crucifixistis, ut ne relinqueretur sancta in carne dispensatio a passionis experte et increato Verbo, sed cōnireretur superne increato Verbo. Quapropter et Dominum et Christum Deus fecit, id quod ex Maria conceptum et Deitati unitum est.

Das ist: Daß Petrus hinzusetzt: „Diesen Jesus, den ihr gekreuzigt habt“ usw., zeigt er damit an die Menschwerdung des Herrn, und ist offenbar, daß er von dem Fleisch redet. Darum hat Gott zum Herrn und Christ gemacht, daß von Maria empfangen und mit der Gottheit vereinigt ist.

AMBROSIUS, l. 3, cap. 12, De Spiritu Sancto (t. 2, p. 157 [f. 765, ed. Colon.]): Angeli adorant non solum divinitatem Christi, sed et scabellum pedum eius. Et postea: Illam ter-

The same, On Humanity Assumed (p. 603, ed. Colon.): "Whatever Scripture says that the Son has received, it understands as having been received with respect to His body, and that this body is the first-fruits of the Church. The Lord therefore first raised and exalted His body, but afterward also the members of His body."

HILARY, lib. 9 (p. 136): "That thus the man Jesus remained in the glory of God the Father, if the flesh had been united to the glory of the Word, and the assumed flesh possessed the glory of the Word." (Concrete for abstract.)

EUSEBIUS OF EMISSA, in his homily on the Sixth Holiday after Easter (Feria 6, paschatos in homiliis 5, patrum, p. 297): "He who, according to His divinity, had always, with the Father and the Holy Ghost, power over all things, now also according to His humanity has received power over all things, so that this man who suffered not long ago rules over heaven and earth, yea, does here and there whatever He wishes."

GREGORY OF NYSSA, quoted by Gelasius and Theodoret, Dialog 2 (t. 2., p. 333): "Therefore, being exalted to the right hand of God' [Acts 2, 33]. Who, then, was exalted? The lowly one or the Highest? But what is lowly if not the human? What else besides the divine is the Highest? But God, being the Highest, does not need to be exalted. Therefore, the apostle says that the human [nature] was exalted, and that it was exalted by becoming Lord and Christ. Therefore, by the words He has made the apostle does not express the premundane [eternal] subsistence of the Lord, but the advancement of that which is low to the Highest, namely, to the right hand of God."

And shortly afterwards: "Because the right hand of God, the Creator of all things that exist, which is the Lord, by whom all things were made, and without whom nothing of those things that were made subsist, has itself, through the union, raised up to its own height the man who has been united with it."

BASIL THE GREAT, Against Eunomius, lib. 2, p. 661: "[When Peter, Acts 2, says:] 'God hath evidently made that same Jesus whom ye have crucified both Lord and Christ,' by the demonstrative word [that same] he applies himself almost entirely to His human nature, seen by all." Shortly afterwards: "So that in saying, 'God hath made Him both Lord and Christ,' he says that power and dominion over all things were entrusted to Him [to the humanity] by the Father."

EPIPHANIUS, Against the Ariomanites (p. 327, t. 1; fol. 728, ed. Paris, 1638): "[Peter, by adding:] 'This same Jesus whom ye crucified' [indicates the incarnation of the Lord, and it is manifest that he is speaking of the flesh], in order that the holy incarnate dispensation might not be left by the impassible and uncreated Word, but might be united above to the uncreated Word. On this account God made that which was conceived of Mary and united to Deity both Lord and Christ."

AMBROSE, lib. 3, cap. 12, Of the Holy Ghost (t. 2, p. 167 [fol. 765, ed. Colon.]): "The angels adore not only the divinity of ram propheta dicit adorandam, quam Dominus Iesus in carnis assumptione suscepit. Itaque per scabellum terra intelligitur, per terram autem caro Christi, quam hodie quoque in mysteriis adoramus, et quam apostoli in Domino Iesu, ut supra diximus, adoraverunt. [Bei Ambrosius folgt noch: Neque enim divinus Christus, sed unus.]

Das ist: Die Engel beten nicht allein die Gottheit Christi an, sondern auch seiner Füße Schemel. Und hernach: Der Prophet sagt, daß die Erde soll angebetet werden, welche der Herr Jesus an sich genommen hat, da er das Fleisch angenommen hat. Darum durch den Fußschemel wird verstanden die Erde, durch die Erde aber das Fleisch Christi, welches wir noch heutigestages im Geheimnis anbeten, daß auch die Apostel im Herrn Jesu angebetet haben.

AUGUSTINUS, De Verbis Domini, sermone 58 (t. 10, p. 217): Si Christus non est natura Deus, sed creatura, nec colendus est nec ut Deus adorandus. Sed illi ad haec replicabunt ac dicent: Quid igitur est, quod carnem eius, quam creaturam esse non negas, simul cum divinitate adoras et ei non minus quam Deitati deservis?

Das ist: Wenn Christus nicht von Natur Gott ist, sondern eine Kreatur, so ist er auch nicht als Gott zu ehren und anzubeten. Aber dawider werden diese vorgeben und sagen: Was ist's denn, daß du sein Fleisch, welches du nicht leugnest, daß es eine Kreatur sei, zugleich mit der Gottheit anbetest und demselben nicht weniger als der Gottheit dienst?

Idem in Ps. 98, 5 (t. 8, p. 1103): Adorate scabellum pedum eius. Scabellum est terra, et Christus suscepit terram de terra, quia caro de terra est et de carne Mariae carnem accepit. Et quia in ipsa carne hic ambulavit et ipsam carnem manducandam nobis ad salutem dedit, nemo autem carnem illam manducat, nisi prius adoraverit. Inventum ergo est, quomodo adoretur tale scabellum pedum Domini, ut non solum non peccemus adorando, sed peccemus non adorando.

Das ist: Der Fußschemel ist die Erde, und Christus hat Erde von der Erde genommen, denn das Fleisch ist von der Erde, und von dem Fleisch Maria hat er Fleisch an sich genommen. Und weil er im Fleisch gewandelt hat, hat er uns auch sein Fleisch zu essen und zu unserm Heil gegeben: niemand aber ist dasselbe Fleisch, er habe es denn zuvor angebetet. Darum ist eine Weise [ge]funden worden, wie solcher Fußschemel des Herrn angebetet werde, daß wir nicht allein nicht sündigen, wenn wir denselben anbeten, sondern daß wir sündigen, so wir ihn nicht anbeten.

CHRYSOSTOMUS, ad Heb. 2 [p. 125]: Καὶ γὰρ ὄντως μέγα καὶ θαυμαστὸν καὶ ἐκπλήξεως γέμον, τὴν ἐξ ἡμῶν σάοχα ἄνω καθήσθαι καὶ προσκυνεῖσθαι ὑπ' ἀγγέλων καὶ ἀρχαγγέλων καὶ τῶν Σεραφίμ καὶ τῶν Χερουβίμ. Τοῦτο πολλάκις εἰς τοῦν ἐγὼ λαβὼν ἐξίσταμαι. Magnum, admirabile et stupore plenum est, carnem nostram sursum sedere et adorari ab angelis et archangelis. Hoc saepe mente versans ecstasin patior etc. Idem 1 Cor. 10 [p. 174; tom. 6, f. 740, et tom. 5, f. 261, ed. Francof.]: Τοῦτο τὸ σῶμα καὶ ἐπὶ φάνης κείμενον, ἠδέσθησαν μάγοι etc., καὶ ὁδὸν ἐστειλαντο μαγὰν, καὶ ἐλθόντες μετὰ φόβον καὶ τρόμον πολλοῦ προσεκύνησαν. Hoc corpus Christi in praesepi iacens Magi venerati sunt etc., et a longe venientes cum timore et tremore multo adoraverunt. Idem apud Leonem, epist. 95: Cognoscamus, quae natura sit, cui Pater dixit: Esto meae particeps sedis. Illa natura est, cui dictum est: Terra es et in terram ibis.

Das ist: Es ist ein großes Wunder, darüber man sich billig entsetzt, daß unser Fleisch droben sitzt und von den Engeln und Erzengeln angebetet wird. Wenn ich oftmals solches bei mir selber bedente, ist mir nicht anders, als wenn ich außer mir selbst wäre. 1 Kor. 10: Eben der Leib, der in der Krippe liegt, den die Weisen aus [dem] Morgenland verehrt und, als sie von ferne [ge]kommen, in großer Furcht und Zittern angebetet haben. Und abermals: Laßt uns wohl merken, welche Natur es sei, zu der der Vater gesagt hat: „Setze dich in meinen Stuhl.“ Es ist die Natur, zu welcher gesagt ist: Du bist Erde, und zur Erde sollst du wieder werden.

THEOPHYLACTUS ex Chrysostomo in caput Matth. 28 [p. 311; ed. Lutet. 8, 1631, f. 184 et 605]: Ἐπεὶ ἡ ἀνθρωπίνη φύσις ἡ πρώτην κατάκριτος, συνημμένη τῷ Θεῷ λόγῳ καθ' ὑπόστασιν, ἐν οὐρανῷ καθήται ὑπ' ἀγγέλων προσκυνουμένη, εἰκότως φησὶν, ὅτι ἐδόθη ἐμοὶ πᾶσα ἐξουσία ἐν οὐρανῷ. Καὶ γὰρ ἡ ἀνθρωπίνη ἡ πρώτην δουλεύουσα τῷ ἐν Χριστῷ ἄρχει πάντων.

Quia humana natura prius condemnata, nunc vero iuncta Deo Verbo personaliter sedet in coelo et ab angelis adoratur, merito dicit: Data est mihi omnis potestas in coelo et in terra. Etenim humana natura prius serviebat, nunc in Christo omnibus imperat.

Das ist: Die menschliche Natur, welche zuvor verdammt war, jeztund aber mit dem Wort persönlich vereinigt und sitzt im Himmel und wird von den Engeln angebetet, die sagt billig: „Wir ist gegeben alle Gewalt im Himmel und Erden“; denn die menschliche Natur, die zuvor diente, herrscht jeztund in Christo über alles.

Idem in 3. cap. Ioh.: Καὶ πάντα δέδωκεν ἐν τῇ χειρὶ τοῦ Υἱοῦ, κατὰ τὸ ἀνθρώπινον.

Pater omnia dedit in manum Filii iuxta humanitatem.

Das ist: Der Vater hat dem Sohne alles in seine Hände gegeben nach der Menschheit.

CYRILLUS, De Incarnatione, cap. 11 (t. 4, p. 241 [t. 5, f. 695]): Verbum in id, quod non erat, se immisit, ut et hominis natura id, quod non erat, fieret, divinae maiestatis dignitatibus per adunctionem fulgens, quae sublevata magis est ultra naturam, quam deiecit infra naturam invertibilem Deum.

Das ist: Das Wort hat sich in das eingelassen, das es nicht war, auf daß des Menschen Natur würde, das es [sic] nicht war, nämlich daß es [sic] durch die Vereinigung leuchten sollte in der Herrlichkeit der göttlichen Majestät, welche vielmehr erhoben ist über die Natur, denn daß sie den unwandelbaren Gott unter ihre Natur sollte geworfen haben.

Christ, but also His footstool." And afterwards: "The prophet says that the earth which the Lord Jesus took upon Himself in the assumption of flesh is to be adored. Therefore by footstool the earth is understood, but by earth the flesh of Christ, which we to-day also adore in the mysteries, and which the apostles adored in the Lord Jesus, as we have said above."

AUGUSTINE, Of the Words of the Lord, Discourse 58 (t. 10, p. 217): "If Christ is not God by nature, but a creature, He is neither to be worshiped nor adored as God. But to these things they will reply and say: Why, then, is it that you adore with His divinity His flesh, which you do not deny to be a creature, and are no less devoted to it than to Deity?"

The same, on Ps. 99, 5 (t. 8, p. 1103): "'Worship His footstool.' His footstool is the earth, and Christ took upon Him earth of earth, because flesh is of earth; and He received flesh of the flesh of Mary. And because He walked here in this very flesh, He also gave this very flesh to be eaten by us for salvation. But no one eats that flesh unless He has first worshiped it. Therefore the way has been found how such footstool of the Lord may be worshiped, so that we not only do not sin by worshiping, but sin by not worshiping."

CHRYSOStOM, on Heb. 2 (p. 125): "For it is really great and wonderful and full of awe that our flesh should be seated above, and be worshiped by angels and archangels and by the seraphim and cherubim. Reflecting upon this, I am often entranced [seem to be beside myself]."

The same, on 1 Cor. 10 (p. 174, t. 6, p. 740, and t. 5, p. 261, ed. Frankf.): "This body, even when lying in the manger, the Magi worshiped, etc.; and they took a long journey; and having come, they worshiped with much fear and trembling."

The same, in Epist. 65 to Leo: "Let us learn to know which nature it is to which the Father said, Share My seat. It is that nature to which it has been said, 'Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return.'"

THEOPHYLACT, from Chrysostom, on chap. 28 of Matt. (p. 311 [ed. Lutet., 8, 1631, fols. 184. 605]): "Since the human nature, but recently condemned, united in person with God the Word, is seated in heaven, worshiped by angels, He says properly: 'All power is given unto Me in heaven.' For also the human nature, which but recently served, now in Christ rules over all things."

The same, on chap. 3 of John: "He has also given all things into the hand of the Son, according to His humanity."

CYRIL, On the Incarnation, cap. 11 (t. 4, p. 241; t. 5, p. 695): "The Word introduced Himself into that which He was not, in order that the nature of man also might become what it was not, resplendent, by its union, with the grandeur of divine majesty, which has been raised beyond nature rather than that it has cast the unchangeable God beneath [its] nature."

Ephesinum Concilium, can. 11, Cyrill., t. 4, p. 140 [Apologet. adv. Orient., t. 6, f. 196]: Si quis non confitetur, carnem Domini esse vivificam, propterea quod propria facta est Verbi, quod omnia vivificat, anathema sit.

Das ist: Welcher nicht bekennt, daß das Fleisch Christi ein lebendigmachend Fleisch sei, darum, daß es des Worts eigen worden ist, welches alles lebendig macht, der sei verflucht.

Et Cyrillus, ibidem, p. 140 [t. 4, f. 85] in explicatione illius anathematismi dicit: Nestorium noluisse vivificationem tribuere carni Christi, sed sententias Ioh. 6 exposuisse de sola Divinitate.

Das ist: Cyrillus in Erklärung des gemeldeten Anathematismi spricht, daß Nestorius dem Fleisch Christi nicht habe zugeben wollen, daß es lebendig mache, sondern habe die Sprüche Joh. 6 allein von der Gottheit ausgelegt.

THEODORETUS dialogo 2 [tom. 2, p. 330]: Και τῆς ἐκ δεξιῶν ἡξιώθη καθέδρας (τὸ σῶμα τοῦ Κυρίου) καὶ παρὰ πάσης προσκυνεῖται τῆς κτίσεως, αἵτε δὴ σῶμα χρηματίζον τοῦ Θεοῦ τῆς φύσεως.

Hoc est: Illud corpus et sessione ad dexteram Dei dignum habitum est et ab omni creatura adoratur, quia corpus appellatur naturae Domini.

Das ist: Dieser Leib ist durch das Eigen zur Rechten Gottes zu solcher Ehre gekommen und wird von aller Creatur angebetet, als daß er Gottes Leib genannt wird.

Idem Psal. 8: Huiusmodi honorem a Deo, universitatis scilicet imperium, humana in Christo natura accepit.

Das ist: Die menschliche Natur hat diese Ehre, nämlich die Herrschaft und Regierung über alles, in Christo empfangen.

LEO, epistola 11, fol. 94 [ep. 25, f. 246]: Assumpti, non assumptis provectionis est, quod Deus illum exaltavit et donavit illi nomen, quod est super omne nomen, ut in nomine Iesu omne genu flectatur, et omnis lingua constetur, quod Dominus sit Iesus Christus in gloria Dei Patris.

Das ist: Es gehört dem angenommenen (Menschen) und nicht (Gott), der ihn angenommen hat, zu, daß Gott ihn hat erhöht und ihm einen Namen gegeben, der über alle Namen ist, daß im Namen Jesu alle Knie gebogen werden und alle Zungen bekennen, daß Jesus sei der Herr in der Ehre des Vaters.

DAMASCENUS, lib. 3, cap. 18 [p. 251]: Ἡ θεία αὐτοῦ (Χριστοῦ) θέλησις ἀναρχός τε καὶ παντογυρός ἦν etc., ἡ δὲ ἀνθρωπίνη αὐτοῦ θέλησις ἀπὸ χρόνου τε ἤρξατο καὶ αὐτὴ τὰ φυσικὰ καὶ ἀδιάβλητα πάντα ὑπέμεινε, καὶ φυσικῶς μὲν οὐ παντοδύναμος ἦν, ὡς δὲ τοῦ Θεοῦ Λόγον, ἀληθῶς καὶ κατὰ φύσιν γενομένη, καὶ παντοδύναμος.

Divina Christi voluntas erat aeterna et omnipotens etc., humana vero eius voluntas a tempore coepit et naturales ac innoxias affectiones sustinuit, et naturaliter quidem non erat omnipotens; ut autem vere et secundum naturam Dei Verbi voluntas est facta, et omnipotens est, hoc est, sicut commentator explicat: divina voluntas suapte natura habet potentiam omnia efficiendi, quae velit, humana vero Christi voluntas non sua natura habet omniefficacem virtutem, sed ut Deo Verbo unita.

Das ist: Des Herrn Christi göttlicher Wille ist ein ewiger und allmächtiger Wille. Aber sein menschlicher Wille hat in der Zeit angefangen und seine natürlichen, unschädlichen Wirkungen gehabt; und zwar natürlich war er nicht ein allmächtiger Wille, aber nachdem er wahrhaftig und natürlich Gottes Wille worden, ist er auch allmächtig, das ist, wie der Ausleger daselbst diese Worte erklärt: der göttliche Wille hat von seiner Natur die Gewalt, daß er tun kann, was er will, aber der menschliche Wille Christi hat nicht von seiner Natur die Kraft, daß er alles tun kann, sondern daher, daß er mit Gott vereinigt ist.

Idem cap. 10: Ἡ δὲ σὰρξ τῇ Θεότητι τοῦ Λόγου ἐνεργούσῃ (κοινωνεῖ) διὰ τε τὸ ὡς δι' ὄργανον τοῦ σώματος τὰς θείας ἐκτελεῖσθαι ἐνεργείας καὶ διὰ τὸ ἓνα εἶναι τὸν ἐνεργοῦντα θεϊκῶς τε ἅμα καὶ ἀνθρωπίνως. Εἰδέναι γὰρ χρὴ, ὡς ὁ ἅγιος αὐτοῦ νοῦς καὶ τὰς φυσικὰς αὐτοῦ ἐνεργεῖ ἐνεργείας etc., κοινωνεῖ τῶν ἐνεργούσῃ τῇ Λόγου Θεότητι καὶ διεπούσῃ καὶ κυβερνώσῃ τὸ πᾶν νοῶν καὶ γινώσκων καὶ διέπων, οὐχ ὡς ψιλὸς ἀνθρώπου νοῦς, ἀλλ' ὡς Θεῷ καθ' ὑπόστασιν ἡνωμένος καὶ Θεοῦ νοῦς χρηματίας.

Caro operanti Deitati Verbi communicat, ideo quod divinae operationes per organum corporis perficiebantur. Ita sancta eius mens etiam naturales suas operationes operatur. Communicat autem et Deitati Verbi operanti ac gubernanti, ipsa etiam intelligens, cognoscens et disponens totum universum, non ut nuda hominis mens, sed ut Deo secundum hypostasim unita et Dei mens constituta.

Das ist: Das Fleisch ist theilhaftig oder hat Gemeinschaft mit dem Wort, daß da wirket, darum daß die göttliche Wirkung durch das Werkzeug des Leibes vollbracht worden. Also hat auch sein heiliges Gemüt seine natürlichen Wirkungen gehabt, aber nachdem es der Gottheit des Worts theilhaftig geworden, die da wirkt und regiert, versteht, weiß und ordnet es alles, was da ist, nicht als eines bloßen Menschen Gemüt, sondern daß es mit Gott persönlich vereinigt und Gottes Gemüt geworden ist.

Idem libro eodem, cap. 21 (p. 280): Ἡ μὲν ἀνθρωπίνη φύσις οὐσιωδῶς οὐ κέκτηται τῶν μελλόντων τὴν γνῶσιν, ἡ δὲ τοῦ Κυρίου ψυχὴ, διὰ τὴν πρὸς αὐτὸν τὸν Λόγον ἔνωσιν καὶ τὴν ὑποστατικὴν ταυτότητα, κατεπλούτησε μετὰ τῶν λοιπῶν θεοσημιῶν καὶ τὴν τῶν μελλόντων γνῶσιν. Et in fine capitis:

Ἥμεῖς δὲ Θεοπότην αὐτὸν φαρὲν καὶ Κύριον πάσης τῆς κτίσεως τὸν ἓνα Χριστὸν, τὸν αὐτὸν δμοῦ Θεὸν τε καὶ ἀνθρώπον καὶ πάντα εἰδέναι. Ἐν αὐτῷ γὰρ εἰσι πάντες οἱ θησαυροὶ τῆς σοφίας καὶ τῆς γνώσεως οἱ ἀπόκρυφοι.

Council of Ephesus (Cyril, t. 4, p. 140 [Apologet, adv. Orient., t. 6, fol. 106]), in Canon 11: "If any one does not confess that the flesh of the Lord is quickening, because it was made the Word's own, who quickens all things, let him be anathema."

Cyril also (ibid., p. 140; t. 4, p. 85), in his explanation of this anathematization, says that Nestorius was unwilling to ascribe quickening to the flesh of Christ, but explained the passages in John 6 as referring to the divinity alone."

THEODORET, Dialog 2: "And it (the body of the Lord) was deemed worthy of the seat on the right hand, and is worshiped by every creature, as it is called the body of the Lord of Nature [the body of God]."

The same, on Ps. 8: "Such honor, namely, dominion over the universe, the human nature in Christ has received of God."

LEO (fol. 94 [Ep. 25, fol. 246]), Epist. 11: "It is a promotion of that which is assumed [man], and not of Him who assumes [God], that God has exalted Him, and given Him a name which is above every name, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord, to the glory of God the Father."

DAMASCENUS, lib. 3, cap. 18 (p. 251): "Therefore His [Christ's] divine will was both eternal and omnipotent, etc. But His human will not only began in time, but also endured natural and unblamable affections, and indeed was not omnipotent by nature; but as it has truly and by nature become the will of God the Word, it is also omnipotent." This means, as explained by a commentator: "The divine will has, by its own nature, the power to do all things which it wishes; but Christ's human will does not have power to do everything by its nature, but as united to God the Word."

The same, cap. 19: "The flesh has communion with the operating divinity of the Word, because the divine operations are accomplished as through the organ of the body, and because He that works both in a divine and human fashion is one. For it is necessary to know that His holy mind works also its natural operations, etc., shares in the working and managing and guiding divinity of the Word, understanding and knowing and managing everything [the entire universe], not as the mere mind of a man, but as personally united with God and being constituted the mind of God."

The same, in the same book, cap. 21: "The human nature does not essentially possess knowledge of the future; but the soul of the Humana natura in Christo essentialiter non possidet seu obtinet futurorum cognitionem, sed ut Domini anima, propter unionem ad ipsum Deum Verbum, locupletata est cum reliquis divinis praedictionibus etiam futurorum cognitione. Et in fine capitis: Nos ergo dicimus, unum Christum eundemque simul Deum et hominem omnia scire, in ipso enim omnes thesauri sapientiae et scientiae absconditi sunt.

Das ist: Die menschliche Natur in Christo besitzt oder hat nicht wesentlich die Erkenntnis zukünftiger Dinge, sondern als die Seele des Herrn ist sie unter und neben andern göttlichen Gaben durch die Vereinigung mit Gott dem Wort auch mit der Erkenntnis zukünftiger Dinge begabt worden. Darum sagen wir, daß der einzige Christus, zugleich Gott und Mensch, alles wisse. Denn in ihm sind alle Schätze der Weisheit und Erkenntnis verborgen.

NICEPHORUS, lib. 18 [1], cap. 36. Christus a discipulis in Galilaeae monte conspicitur, et ibi a Patre summam potestatem coeli et terrae, iuxta humanam naturam scilicet, traditam esse confirmat.

Das ist: Christus wird von den Jüngern auf dem Berge in Galiläa gesehen, und daselbst hat er bezeugt, daß ihm die höchste Gewalt im Himmel und Erden nach der menschlichen Natur gegeben sei.

IV.

Daß die Heilige Schrift und die Väter solche Majestät, so Christus in der Zeit empfangen hat, nicht allein von erschaffenen Gaben, de finitis qualitativis, verstanden haben, sondern von der Herrlichkeit und Majestät der Gottheit, die Gottes eigen sei, zu welcher seine menschliche Natur in der Person des Sohnes Gottes erhöht, und also die Kraft und Wirkung der göttlichen Natur, so der Gottheit eigen ist, empfangen habe.

Ioh. 17, 5: Et nunc glorifica me, tu Pater, apud temet ipsum ea gloria, quam habui apud te, priusquam mundus fieret.

Das ist: Und nun verkläre mich, du Vater, bei dir selbst mit der Klarheit, die ich bei dir hatte, ehe die Welt war.

Col. 2, 9: In ipso habitat omnis plenitudo Deitatis corporaliter.

Das ist: In ihm wohnet alle Fülle der Gottheit leibhaftig u.s.w.

HILARIUS, De Trinitate, lib. 3 (p. 28): Verbum caro factum orabat, ut id, quod de tempore erat, gloriam eius claritatis, quae sine tempore est, acciperet.

Das ist: Das Wort, das Fleisch geworden ist, betet, damit dasjenige, so in der Zeit seinen Anfang hat, die Glorie der Herrlichkeit empfinde, die außerhalb der Zeit (von Ewigkeit) ist.

GREGORIUS NYSSENUS citante Gelasio et Theodoro, Dialogo 2, de dicto illo Petri Act. 2: Dextera Dei exaltatus etc. (t. 2, p. 330 [333]): Αὐτὴ (ἡ δεξιὰ τοῦ Θεοῦ) τὸν ἐνωθέντα πρὸς αὐτὴν ἀνθρώπον εἰς τὸ ἴδιον ἀνήγαγεν ὕψος διὰ τῆς ἐνώσεως. Ipsa dextera unitum sibi hominem in propriam suam evehit celsitudinem seu sublimitatem per unionem.

Das ist: Die Rechte selbst hat den Menschen, so mit ihr vereinigt ist, durch die Vereinigung in seine [in ihre] eigene Höhe erhoben.

Idem, De Anima: Deus Verbum a communione illa, quae sibi est ad corpus et animam, nunquam alteratur, neque particeps est imperfectionis illarum, sed tradens eis suae Divinitatis virtutem manet idem, quod erat et ante unionem.

Das ist: Gott das Wort wird durch die Gemeinschaft, so es hat mit dem Leib und der Seele, nimmer verwandelt, ist auch derselben Schwachheit nicht theilhaftig, sondern hat seiner Gottheit Kraft ihnen gegeben, und bleibt das Wort eben das, so es vor der Vereinigung war.

BASILIIUS [Magnus in Nativ. Christi] εἰς τὴν ἀγίαν τοῦ Χριστοῦ γένεσιν (p. 231): Τίνα τρόπον ἐν σαρκὶ ἡ Θεότης; ὡς τὸ πῦρ ἐν οὐδὲν οὐ μεταβατικῶς, ἀλλὰ μεταδοτικῶς. Οὐ γὰρ ἐκτρέχει τὸ πῦρ πρὸς τὸ οὐδὲν, μένει δὲ κατὰ χώραν μεταδίδωσιν αὐτῷ τῆς οἰκείας δυνάμεως, πλεονεξοῦντες ἐλαττοῦναι τῇ μεταδόσει, καὶ ὅλον πληροῖ ἑαυτοὺ τὸ μέγεθος.

Quomodo Deitas est in carne? Sicut ignis in ferro, non transitive, sed communicative. Non enim excurrit ignis ad ferrum, sed manens in suo loco communicat seu impertit ferro ignito propriam suam facultatem (vim seu potentiam), nec communicatione illa minor fit, sed se ipso totum ferrum replet, quod (illa scilicet unione) particeps est ignis.

Das ist: Das menschliche Fleisch Gottes ist theilhaftig der Gottheit, wie das Feuer einem feurigen oder glühenden Eisen seine eigene Kraft und Vermögen theilt, und wird doch durch diese Gemeinschaft nicht kleiner, sondern erfüllt das ganze Eisen mit Feuer, welches (durch diese Vereinigung) ist des Feuers theilhaftig [ge]worden.

EPIPHANIUS in Ancorato [fol. 504 (f. 86, ed. Colon.)]: Συνδυαμώσας σῶμα γῆινον τῇ Θεότητι, εἰς μίαν δύναμιν ἤνωσεν, εἰς μίαν Θεότητα συνήγαγεν, εἰς ὃν Κύριος, εἰς Χριστός, οὐ δύο Χριστοί, οὐδὲ δύο Θεοί etc.

Das ist: Eben der Gott, der Mensch ist, hat den irdischen Leib mit der Gottheit in eine Gewalt vereinigt und in eine Gottheit geführt.

Lord, on account of the union with the Word Himself and the personal identity, was, apart from the other divine criteria, rich also in knowledge of the future."

At the end of the chapter: "We say that this Master and Lord of all creation, the one Christ, who is at the same time God and man, knows also all things. For in Him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge."

NICEPHORUS, lib. 18, cap. 36: "Christ is seen by His disciples on the mountain in Galilee, and there asserts that the highest power in heaven and in earth has, by the Father, been delivered Him, namely, according to His human nature."

IV.

That the Holy Scriptures and the fathers have understood this majesty which Christ has received in time not only of created gifts de finitis qualitibus, but of the glory and majesty of divinity belonging to God, to which His human nature, in the person of the Son of God, has been exalted, and thus has received the power and efficacy of the divine nature which are peculiar to the Deity.

John 17, 5: And now, O Father, glorify Thou Me with Thine Own Self, with the glory which I had with Thee before the world was.

Col. 2, 9: In Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily.

HILARY, On the Trinity, lib. 3 (p. 28): "The Word made flesh prayed that that which was from time [had a beginning in time] might receive the glory of that brightness which is without time."

GREGORY OF NYSSA, quoted by Gelasius and Theodoret, Dialog 2, concerning the saying of Peter, Acts 2: "Being exalted by the right hand of God," etc. (t. 2, p. 333 [al. 330]): "This (right hand of God), through the union, raised to its own height the Man united to it."

The same, Concerning the Soul: "God the Word is never altered by the communion which He has with body and soul, neither is He partaker of their imperfection, but, transmitting to them the power of His divinity, He remains the same that He was even before the union."

BASIL THE GREAT, On the Holy Nativity of Christ (p. 231): "In what manner is the Deity in the flesh? Just as fire in iron, not by transition, but by impartation. For fire does not run out to the iron, but, remaining in its place, imparts to it its own peculiar power, which is not diminished by the impartation, and fills the entire mass that becomes partaker of it."

EPIPHANIUS, in Ancoratus (fol. 504 [fol. 86, ed. Colon.]): "Strengthening an earthly body with divinity, He united it into one power, brought it into one divinity, being one Lord, one Christ — not two Christs, nor two Gods," etc.

CYRILLUS in Iohannem, lib. 4, cap. 23: Non imperite omnino vivificam carnem esse negatis. Nam si sola intelligatur, nihil prorsus vivificare potest, quippe quae vivificante indigeat. Quum vero incarnationis mysterium laudabili cura scrutati fueritis et vitam habitantem in carne cognoveritis, quamvis nihil penitus caro per se ipsam possit, vivificam tamen factam esse credetis. Nam quoniam cum vivificante Verbo coniuncta est, tota effecta est vivifica. Non enim ad corruptibilem suam naturam iunctam Dei Verbum detraxit, sed ipsa ad melioris virtutem elevata est. Quamvis ergo natura carnis, ut caro est, vivificare nequeat, facit tamen hoc, quia totam Verbi operationem suscepit. Non enim Pauli aut Petri aut ceterorum, sed ipsius vitae corpus, in quo Deitatis plenitudo corporaliter habitat, facere hoc potest. Quas ob res caro ceterorum omnium nihil prodest, Christi autem caro, quia in ipsa unigenitus Dei Filius habitat, sola vivificare potest.

Das ist: Daß ihr leugnet, daß das Fleisch nicht ein lebendigmachendes Fleisch sei, daran tut ihr nicht allerdinge unweisklich: denn so das Fleisch allein verstanden wird, kann es ganz und gar nicht lebendig machen, welches wohl bedarf des, der es lebendig mache. Wenn wir aber das Geheimnis der Menschwerdung mit Fleis̃ erforschen und erkennen, daß das Leben im Fleis̃ wohnt, wiewohl das Fleisch ganz und gar nichts für sich selbst vermag, so werdet ihr doch glauben, daß es ein lebendigmachend Fleisch [ge]worden sei; denn weil es mit dem lebendigmachenden Wort vereinigt ist, ist es ganz und gar ein lebendigmachend Fleisch [ge]worden. Denn es hat (das Fleisch Christi) das Wort Gottes, mit dem es vereinigt, nicht herunter zu der vergänglichen Natur gezogen, sondern (das Fleisch Christi) ist zu einer besseren Kraft erhöht worden. Denn obwohl die Natur des Fleisches, darum daß es ein Fleisch ist, nicht kann lebendig machen, so tut es doch solches, und daher, daß es die ganze Wirkung des Wortes empfangen hat. Denn weder St. Pauli noch St. Petri noch eines andern (Menschen), sondern der Leib des Lebens, in dem die Fülle der Gottheit leibhaftig wohnt, vermag solches zu tun. Darum auch das Fleisch aller andern Menschen ist nichts nütze, aber das Fleisch Christi, weil in demselben der eingeborne Sohn Gottes wohnt, allein kann lebendig machen.

AUGUSTINUS contra Felicianum Arianum, cap. 11: Iniuria sui corporis affectam non fateor Deitatem, sicut maiestatem Deitatis glorificatam novimus carnem.

Das ist: Ich sage nicht, daß der Gottheit die Schmach dergestalt widerfahren sei, die über den Leib gegangen ist, wie wir wissen, daß sein Fleisch mit der göttlichen Majestät verklärt ist.

THEODORETUS, cap. de Antichristo (t. 2, p. 411): Verbum homo factum non particularem gratiam contulit assumptae naturae, sed totam plenitudinem Deitatis complacuit in ipsa habitare.

Das ist: Das Wort, so ein Mensch [ge]worden ist, hat nicht stückweise der angenommenen Natur Gnade erzeigt, sondern es hat (Gott) gefallen, daß die ganze Fülle der Gottheit in ihr wohne.

Idem in Ps. 21 (t. 1, p. 110): Si natura assumpta cum Divinitate assumente est copulata, etiam eiusdem gloriae et honoris particeps et consors facta est.

Das ist: Wenn die angenommene Natur mit der Gottheit, so sie angenommen hat, ist vereinigt, so ist sie auch teilhaftig [ge]worden der Glorie und Ehre der Gottheit.

Das ist: Die menschliche Natur selbst hat nach der Auferstehung die göttliche Herrlichkeit erlangt.

DAMASCENUS, lib. 3, cap. 7 et 15 (p. 194): Kai autē mēn (ē theia phōis) tōn oikeiōn aūchmātōn tēi saoxi metadidōsi, mēnoua autē apathēs kai tōn tēs saoxos pavōn amētochos.

Divina natura proprias suas excellentias seu glorificationes carni communicat seu impertit, ipsa vero in se passionum carnis manet experta.

V.

Daß Christus als Gott dieselbe göttliche Majestät auf eine andere Weise habe, nämlich wesentlich und als ihre wesentliche Eigenschaft an und für sich selbst, aber als Mensch habe er dieselbe anderer Gestalt, nämlich nicht wesentlich an und für sich selbst, sondern von wegen und nach Art der persönlichen Vereinigung.

Ioh. 14, 6: Ego sum vita. Ich bin das Leben.

Ioh. 5, 26: Dedit ei vitam habere in se ipso, quia filius hominis est.

Das ist: Er hat dem Sohn gegeben, das Leben zu haben in ihm selber, darum daß er des Menschen Sohn ist.

CYRILLUS, lib. 12. Thesauri, cap. 15 [t. 2, p. 167; t. 5, ed. Paris. 1638]: Conditio et proprietates alia creaturae, alia Creatori inest, sed natura nostra a Filio Dei assumpta mensuram suam excessit et in conditionem assumptis eam per gratiam translata est.

Das ist: Es ist ein anderer Stand und Eigenschaft der Creatur und ein anderer Stand und Eigenschaft des Schöpfers; aber unsere Natur, nachdem sie von dem Sohn Gottes angenommen ist, hat sie die Maß [das Maß] unserer Natur überschritten und ist in den Stand der Natur aus Gnaden versetzt, von der sie angenommen worden ist.

V.

Christum unam eandemque maiestatem divinam aliter ut Deum, nimirum essentialiter et ut essentialium proprietatem, aliter ut hominem, videlicet non essentialiter neque in et secundum sese, sed pro ratione et modo unionis personalis habere.

CYRIL, on John, lib. 4, cap. 23: "You are not altogether unwise in denying that the flesh is quickening. For if it alone be understood, it can quicken nothing whatever, being itself in need of a quickener. But when you have examined the mystery of the incarnation with commendable care, and have learned to know the life dwelling in the flesh, you will believe that, although the flesh is not able to do anything by itself, it has nevertheless become quickening. For since it has been united to the quickening Word, it has entirely been rendered quickening. For it [the flesh of Christ] has not dragged down to its corruptible nature the Word of God which has been joined to it, but has itself been elevated to the power of the better nature. Although, therefore, the nature of the flesh, inasmuch as it is flesh, cannot quicken, nevertheless it does this because it has received the entire operation of the Word. For the body not of Paul or of Peter or of others, but that of Life itself in which the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily, can do this. Therefore, the flesh of all the others can do nothing, but only the flesh of Christ can quicken, because in it dwells the only-begotten Son of God."

the creature and another to the Creator, but our nature, assumed by the Son of God, has exceeded its measure, and by grace has been transferred into the condition of the One assuming it."

AUGUSTINE, Against Felicianus the Arian, cap. 11: "I do not acknowledge that Deity experienced the violence done His body in the same manner as we know that the flesh was glorified by the majesty of Deity."

THEODORET, cap. Of Antichrist (t. 2, p. 411): "The Word that became man did not confer a partial grace upon the assumed nature, but it pleased [God] that the whole fulness of Deity dwell in it."

The same, on Ps. 21, t. 1, p. 110: "If the assumed nature has been joined with the divinity which assumed it, it has also become participant and associate of the same glory and honor."

The same, on Heb. 1: "The human nature itself, after the resurrection, attained divine glory."

DAMASCENUS, lib. 3, capp. 7. 15: "And this (the divine nature) imparts to the flesh its own excellences, itself [according to its nature] remaining impassible and not participating in the passions [sufferings] of the flesh."

V.

That Christ as God has the same divine majesty in one way, namely, essentially and as His essential property, in and of Himself; but as man He has it in another mode, namely, not essentially in and of Himself, but because of, and according to, the mode of the personal union.

John 14, 6: I am the Life.

John 5, 26: He hath given to the Son to have life in Himself, . . . because He is the Son of Man.

CYRIL, lib. 12, Thesauri, cap. 15 (t. 2, p. 167 [t. 5, ed. Paris, 1638]): "There is one condition and property appertaining to Idem in Iohannem, lib. 2, cap. 144 (t. 1, p. 134 [t. 4, ed. Paris. 1638]): Christus causam subiecit, quare vitam et potestatem iudicii sibi a Patre data dixerit, dicens: quia filius hominis est, ut intelligamus omnia sibi data esse ut homini. Unigenitus vero Filius non vitae particeps, sed vita naturaliter est.

Das ist: Christus hängt gleich die Ursache daran, warum er gesprochen habe, daß ihm vom Vater das Leben und die Gewalt, das Gericht zu halten, gegeben sei, und sagt: denn er ist des Menschen Sohn, auf daß wir verstehen, daß alles ihm gegeben sei als einem Menschen. Denn der eingeborne Sohn ist nicht theilhaftig des Lebens, sondern ist natürlich das Leben selbst.

Idem, lib. 3, cap. 37 (t. 1, p. 181): Vivificat corpus Christi, quia ipsius vitae corpus est, virtutem Verbi incarnati retinens, et plenum potestate illius, quo universa sunt et vivunt.

Das ist: Der Leib Christi macht lebendig; denn es ist des Lebens Leib und behält die Kraft des Wortes, das Fleisch ist [ge]worden, und ist erfüllt oder voller Gewalt dessen, von welchem alle Dinge sind und leben.

Idem, lib. 4, cap. 14 (p. 201): Quoniam Salvatoris caro coniuncta est Verbo Dei, quod naturaliter vita est, effecta est vivifica.

Das ist: Die weil das Fleisch unsers Heilandes vereinigt ist mit dem Wort Gottes, welches natürlich das Leben ist, ist es auch lebendigmachend [ge]worden.

Et cap. 18 (p. 204): Corpus meum vita-replevi, mortalem carnem assumpsi; sed quia naturaliter vita existens habito in ipsa, totam ad vitam meam reformavi.

Das ist: Meinen Leib habe ich mit dem Leben erfüllt und das sterbliche Fleisch an mich genommen. Aber weil ich natürlich das Leben bin, so wohne ich in demselben (Fleisch) und habe es ganz und gar zu meinem Leben reformiert.

Cap. 24 (p. 210): Natura carnis ipsa per se vivificare non potest, nec sola esse in Christo intelligitur, sed habet Filium Dei sibi coniunctum, qui substantialiter vita est. Quando igitur vivificam Christus carnem suam appellat, non ita illi, ut sibi sive proprio Spiritui, vim vivificandi attribuit. Nam per se ipsum Spiritus vivificat, ad cuius virtutem caro per coniunctionem concendit. Quomodo autem id fiat, nec mente intelligere nec lingua dicere possumus, sed silentio ac firma fide id suscipimus.

Das ist: Die Natur des Fleisches für sich selbst kann nicht lebendig machen, wie sie auch nicht allein in Christo verstanden wird, sondern sie hat den Sohn Gottes mit ihr [mit sich] vereinigt, welcher wesentlich das Leben ist. Darum, wenn Christus sein Fleisch ein lebendigmachend Fleisch nennt, schreibt er demselben nicht also die Kraft, lebendig zu machen, zu wie ihm selbst oder seinem eigenen Geist. Denn der Geist macht für sich selbst lebendig, zu welches [zu dessen] Kraft das Fleisch durch die Vereinigung ist aufgestiegen. Wie aber das zugehe, das kann ich in meinem Verstand nicht begreifen noch mit meiner Zunge aussprechen, sondern wir nehmen das in der Stille mit Glauben an.

Das ist: Das Fleisch des Lebens ist des Eingebornen Fleisch und zu der Kraft des Lebens gebracht worden.

Idem, lib. 11, cap. 21 (p. 552): Ipsa caro Christi non a se sancta fuit, sed coniunctione Verbi ad Verbi virtutem quodammodo reformata, salutis atque sanctificationis causa est participantibus; non ergo carni, ut caro est, operationis divinae virtutem, sed naturae Verbi attribuibimus.

Das ist: Das Fleisch Christi ist nicht von sich selbst heilig, sondern durch die Vereinigung mit dem Wort ist es auf seine Weise zur Kraft des Wortes gebracht, daß es ist eine Ursache des Heils und der Heiligung denen, so desselben theilhaftig werden. Denn wir nicht dem Fleisch, wie es an sich selbst Fleisch ist, die Wirkung der göttlichen Kraft, sondern dem Wort zuschreiben.

Lib. 6, Dialog. [t. 5, op. ed. cit.]: Glorificatur a Patre, non quia Deus, sed quoniam erat homo, quasi propriae naturae fructum non habens potentiam operandi efficaciter divine; accepit quodammodo illam per unionem et ineffabilem concursum, qui intelligitur Dei esse Verbi cum humanitate.

Das ist: Er wird vom Vater verkört, nicht als Gott, sondern daß [sondern weil] er ein Mensch war, gleich als der seiner eigenen Natur Frucht nicht hatte die Kraft, göttlich zu wirken; die hat er auf seine Weise empfangen durch die Vereinigung und wunderbare Zusammenfügung des Wortes Gottes mit der Menschheit.

Das ist: Er hat das Leben in den angenommenen Leib [ein]gelassen durch die Vereinigung beider Naturen.

Ibidem (p. 279): Vivificat Verbum propter ineffabilem nativitatem ex vivente Patre. Atamen est videre, ubi tribuatur etiam propriae carni divinae efficacia gloriae. Item: Otiosam constebimus terrenam carnem ad hoc, ut possit vivificare, quatenus pertinet ad propriam eius naturam.

Das ist: Das Wort macht lebendig von wegen der unaussprechlichen Geburt aus dem lebendigen Vater. Doch soll man sehen, wo auch seinem eigenen Fleisch die Kraft der göttlichen Herrlichkeit geschrieben werde. Item: Wir werden vergeblich bekennen ein irdisch Fleisch zu dem, daß es könne lebendig machen, nämlich soviel belangt seine eigene Natur.

The same, on John, lib. 2, cap. 144 (t. 1, p. 134 [t. 4, ed. Paris, 1638]): "Christ added the reason why He said that life and the power of judgment had been given Him by the Father, saying, Because He is the Son of Man, in order that we may understand that all things were given Him as man. However, the only-begotten Son is not partaker of life, but is life by nature."

The same, lib. 3, cap. 37 (t. 1, p. 181): "The body of Christ quickens, because it is the body of Life itself, retaining the power of the incarnate Word, and full of the power of Him by whom all things are and live."

The same, lib. 4, cap. 14 (p. 201): "Since the flesh of the Savior was joined to the Word of God, who is Life by nature, it was rendered quickening."

And cap. 18 (p. 204): "My body I have filled with life, I have assumed mortal flesh; but since, being naturally the Life, I dwell in it [the flesh], I have transformed it altogether according to My life."

Cap. 24 (p. 210): "The nature itself of the flesh cannot of itself quicken, neither is it understood to be alone in Christ, but it has united with it the Son of God, who is substantially the Life. Therefore, when Christ calls His flesh quickening, He does not ascribe the power of quickening to it in the same manner as to Himself or His own Spirit. For the Spirit quickens of Himself, to Whose power the flesh rises by the union. But how this occurs we can neither understand with the mind nor express with the tongue, but we receive it in silence and firm faith."

The same, lib. 10, cap. 13 (p. 501): "The flesh of life, having been made the flesh of the Only-begotten, has been brought to the power of life."

The same, lib. 11, cap. 21 (p. 552): "The flesh itself of Christ was not of itself holy, but, transformed in a certain manner by union with the Word to the power of the Word, it is the cause of salvation and sanctification to those who partake thereof. Therefore, we ascribe the efficacy of the divine working not to the flesh as flesh, but to the power of the Word."

Lib. 6, Dialog. (t. 5, op. ed. cit.): "He is glorified by the Father, not because He is God, but since He was man; for, not having as the fruit of His own nature the power of working with divine efficacy, He received it in a certain manner by the union and ineffable concurrence which God the Word is understood to have with humanity."

The same, On the True Faith, to Theodosius (p. 278): "He has introduced His life into the assumed body by the very dispensation of the union."

In the same place (p. 279): "The Word quickens on account of the ineffable birth from the living Father. Yet we should see where the efficacy of divine glory is ascribed also to His own flesh." Also: "We will confess that, with respect to the ability to quicken, earthly flesh is inoperative, so far as its own nature is concerned."

EPIPHANIUS, Contra Ariomanitas, p. 337 [Haeres. 69, f. 789, ed. Colon.]: Ἡ γὰρ αὐτοῦ ἐνανθρωπήσας οὐ κατ' ἰδίαν τις οὐσα, οὐ γὰρ ἀποκεχωρισμένης τῆς Θεότητος, καὶ χωρὶς οὐσης τῆς ἐνανθρωπήσεως ἔλεγεν ὡς ἄλλου, ἀλλὰ συναμμένης τῆς ἐνανθρωπήσεως τῇ Θεότητι, μιᾶς οὐσης ἀγιαστίας [ἀγιότητας], καὶ ἥδη ἐν αὐτῇ τὰ τελειότατα ἐπισταμένης. Οἷα δὲ ἐν Θεῷ συναρμωμένη καὶ εἰς μίαν Θεότητα συναρμωμένη.

Humanitas enim illius non seorsim per se subsistit, non enim separata Deitate et seorsim existente natura humana dicebat, velut alius et alius, sed cuncta humanitate cum Deitate, una existente sanctificatione, et iam in ipsa, quae perfectissima sunt, sciente, nimirum in Deo et in unam Deitatem coaptata.

Das ist: Die Menschheit Christi besteht nicht abgesondert für sich selbst, sondern sie ist mit der Gottheit vereinigt, und also jeztund in derselben Gottheit weilt sie, daß ganz vollkommen, als die mit Gott vereinigt ist.

AUGUSTINUS de verbis Domini sermone 58 (t. 10, p. 217): Ego vero dominicae carnem, imo perfectam in Christo humanitatem ideo adoro, quod a Divinitate suscepta et Deitati unita est, et non alium et alium, sed unum eundemque Deum et hominem Filium Dei esse confiteor. Denique si hominem separaveris a Deo, illi nunquam credo nec servio.

Das ist: Ich bete an des Herrn Fleisch, ja die ganze vollkommene Menschheit in Christo, darum daß sie von der Gottheit ist angenommen und mit der Gottheit vereinigt, und sage nicht, daß ein anderer sei Gott, ein anderer der Mensch, sondern ich bekenne, daß der Sohn Gottes sei zugleich Gott und Mensch. So du aber den Menschen von Gott abgesonderst, so glaube ich ihm nicht und diene ihm auch nicht.

Item: Humanitatem non nudam vel solam, sed Divinitati unitam, scilicet unum Dei Filium, Deum verum et hominem verum, si quis adorare contempserit, aeternaliter morietur.

Und abermals: So jemand die Menschheit, doch nicht bloß oder allein, sondern mit Gott vereinigt, und also den einigen Sohn Gottes, wahren Gott und wahren Menschen, verehrt und nicht anruft, der wird des ewigen Todes sterben.

Augustinus de Civitate, lib. 10, cap. 24: Non ergo caro Christi per se ipsam mundat credentes, sed per Verbum, a quo suscepta est.

Das ist: Darum reinigt das Fleisch Christi nicht für sich selbst die Gläubigen, sondern durch das Wort, von dem es angenommen ist.

EPHESINUM CONCILIUM, can. 11 [ap. Cyrillum, t. 6, f. 196]: Si quis non confitetur, carnem Domini esse vivificam propterea, quod propria facta est Verbi, quod omnia vivificat, anathema sit.

Das ist: Wenn jemand nicht bekennet, daß das Fleisch Christi ein lebendigmachend Fleisch sei, darum daß es des Wortes eigen [ge]worden ist, daß alles lebendig macht, der sei verflucht.

THEOPHYLACTUS, in Ioh., cap. 3 [f. 605 et 184, ed. cit.]: Καὶ πάντα δέδωκεν ἐν τῇ χειρὶ τοῦ Υἱοῦ κατὰ τὸ ἀνθρώπινον. Εἰ δὲ κατὰ τὸ Θεϊκόν, τί τοῦτο; δέδωκεν ὁ Πατήρ τὰ πάντα τῷ Υἱῷ λόγῳ φύσεως, ἀλλ' οὐ χάριτος.

Omnia dedit in manum Filii iuxta humanitatem; si autem et secundum Divinitatem intelligatur, dedit Pater omnia Filio ratione naturae, non gratiae.

Das ist: Er hat alles in die Hände des Sohnes gegeben nach der Menschheit. Da es aber auch nach der Gottheit verstanden würde, so hat der Vater dem Sohne alles gegeben nach der Natur und nicht nach der Gnade.

Idem, Matth. 28: Εἰ μὲν ὡς ἀπὸ τοῦ Θεοῦ Λόγου λεγόμενον ἐκλάβοις, οὐκ ἐδόθη μοι ἡ πᾶσα ἐξουσία, καθὼ καὶ ἄκουες καὶ ἐκόντες νῦν ἐπιγινώσκουσίν με Θεόν, οἱ πρόην κατὰ τὸν τῆς ἀκουοῦν ὑποταγῆς τρόπον δουλεύοντές μοι. Εἰ δὲ ὡς ἀπὸ τῆς ἀνθρωπίνης φύσεως λεγόμενον, οὕτω νόει, οὐκ ἐγώ, ἡ πρόην κατὰ κριτος φύσει, κατὰ δὲ τὴν πρὸς τὸν Υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἀσύγχυτον ἔνωσιν Θεὸς οὐσα, ἔλαβον τὴν ἐξουσίαν κατὰ πάντων.

Si de Divinitate, Deo Verbo, intelligas: Data est mihi omnis potestas, sensus erit, et nolentes et volentes nunc me Deum agnoscunt, qui prius mihi serviebant involuntariae obedientiae modo. Si autem de humana natura dicitur, sic intellige: Ego, prius condemnata natura, existens autem Deus, secundum unionem ad Filium Dei, absque naturarum confusione accepi potestatem omnem.

Das ist: Wenn du von der Gottheit verstehst: „Mir ist gegeben alle Gewalt“, so ist das die Meinung: Nachdem mir zuvor alles wider seinen Willen gedient hat, so habe ich es jeztund in einem willigen Gehorsam. Wenn es aber von der menschlichen Natur verstanden wird, so sollst du es also verstehen: Ich, die ich zuvor eine verdamnte Natur, nun aber Gott, nach der Vereinigung mit dem Sohne Gottes, habe ohne Vermischung der Naturen alle Gewalt empfangen.

DAMASCENUS, lib. 3, cap. 17: Οὐ γὰρ κατ' οἰκείαν ἐνέργειαν, ἀλλὰ διὰ τὸν ἡνωμένον αὐτῇ Λόγον τὰ θεῖα ἐνέργει, τοῦ Λόγου δι' αὐτῆς τὴν οἰκείαν ἐνδεκνυμένον ἐνέργειαν. Κατεῖ μὲν γὰρ ὁ πεπρωακτωμένος σίδηρος, οὐ φυσικῶ λόγῳ τὴν κανονικὴν κεκτημένος ἐνέργειαν, ἀλλ' ἐκ τῆς πρὸς τὸ πῦρ ἐνώσεως τοῦτο κεκτημένος. Ἡ αὐτὴ τοιγαροῦν θνητὴ τε ἦν δι' αὐτὴν, καὶ ζωοποιὸς διὰ τὴν πρὸς τὸν Λόγον καθ' ὑπόστασιν ἔνωσιν.

Non secundum propriam operationem, sed propter unitum sibi Verbum divina operabatur (caro Domini), Verbo per eam propriam suam operationem manifestante. Nam et ferrum ignitum urit non naturali ratione possidens ustricem operationem, sed obtinens eam ex unionem ignis et ferri. Ipsa igitur caro Domini mortalis erat propter se ipsam et vivifica propter hypostaticam ad Verbum unionem.

EPIPHANIUS, Against the Ariomanites, p. 337 (Hæres., 69; p. 789, ed. Colon.): "For His human nature was not something subsisting apart by itself, neither did He speak with the divinity separated and the human nature existing apart, as though they were different persons, but with the human nature united with the divine (there being one consecration), and in the same even now knowing the most perfect things, it being now united in God and joined to the one Deity."

AUGUSTINE, Of the Words of the Lord, Discourse 58 (t. 10, pp. 217. 218): "I indeed adore the Lord's flesh, yea, the perfect humanity in Christ, for the reason that it has been assumed by the divinity and united to Deity, and I confess not that there are two different persons, but that the one and the same Son of God is God and man. In a word, if you separate man from God, I never believe nor serve Him."

Also: "If any one disdain worshiping humanity, not naked or alone, but united to divinity, namely, the one Son of God, true God and true man, he will die eternally."

The same, De Civitate, lib. 10, cap. 24: "The flesh of Christ, therefore, does not of itself cleanse believers, but through the Word, by which it has been assumed."

COUNCIL OF EPHESUS, Canon 11 (in Cyril, t. 6, p. 196): "If any one does not confess that the Lord's flesh is quickening, for the reason that it was appropriated to the Word that quickens all things, let him be anathema."

THEOPHYLACT, on John 3 (pp. 605. 184, ed. cit.): "And He has given all things into the hand of the Son, according to humanity. But if [also] according to divinity, what is meant? The Father has given all things to the Son by reason of nature, not of grace."

The same, on Matt. 28: "If you would understand the declaration: 'All power is given unto Me in heaven and in earth,' as spoken of God the Word, the meaning will be that both the unwilling and willing now acknowledge Me as God, who before served Me after the manner of involuntary obedience. But as spoken of the human nature, understand it thus: I, previously the condemned nature, but being God according to the unconfused union with the Son of God, have received power over all things."

DAMASCENUS (lib. 3, cap. 17): "For not according to its [the flesh's] own operation, but by the Word united to it, He wrought divine things, the Word displaying through it His own operation. For glowing iron burns

Das ist: Das Fleisch des Herrn wirkt göttliche Werke nicht nach seiner eigenen Wirkung, sondern daher, daß es mit dem Wort vereinigt war, welches durch das Fleisch seine eigene Wirkung offenbart. Denn auch das glühende Eisen hat nicht aus seiner Natur die Kraft und Wirkung zu brennen, sondern hat es erlangt, beß't's und behält's aus der Vereinigung des Eisens und des Feuers. Darum ist das Fleisch des Herrn sterblich für sich selbst und ein lebendigmachendes Fleisch von wegen der persönlichen Vereinigung mit dem Wort.

Idem, cap. 18: Ἡ θεία αὐτοῦ (Χριστοῦ) θέλησις ἀναρχός τε καὶ παντουργός ἦν etc. Ἡ δὲ ἀνθρωπίνη αὐτοῦ θέλησις ἀπὸ χρόνου τε ἤρξατο, καὶ αὐτὴ τὰ φυσικὰ καὶ ἀδιάβλητα πάθη ἐπέμεινε, καὶ φυσικῶς μὲν οὐ παντοδύναμος ἦν, ὡς δὲ τοῦ Θεοῦ Λόγου ἀληθῶς καὶ κατὰ φύσιν γενομένη καὶ παντοδύναμος.

Divina Christi voluntas erat aeterna et omnipotens, humana vero eius voluntas a tempore coepit et naturales ac innoxias affectiones sustinuit. Et naturaliter quidem non erat omnipotens, ut autem vere et secundum naturam Dei Verbi voluntas est facta et omnipotens est. Hoc est, sicut commentator explicat: divina voluntas suapte natura habet potentiam omnia efficiendi, quae velit; humana vero Christi voluntas non sua natura habet omniefficacem virtutem, sed ut Deo Verbo unita.

Das ist: Des Herrn Christi göttlicher Wille ist ein ewiger und allmächtiger Wille, aber sein menschlicher Wille hat in der Zeit angefangen und seine natürlichen unschädlichen Wirkungen gehabt. Und zwar natürlich war er nicht ein allmächtiger Wille, aber nachdem er wahrhaftig und natürlich Gottes des Wort's Wille [ge]worden, ist er auch allmächtig. Das ist, wie der Ausleger daselbst diese Worte Damasceni erklärt: der göttliche Wille hat von seiner eigenen Natur die Gewalt, daß er tun kann, was er will; aber der menschliche Wille Christi hat nicht von seiner Natur diese Kraft, daß er alles tun kann, sondern daher, daß er mit Gott vereinigt ist.

Idem, libro eodem, cap. 21: Ἡ μὲν ἀνθρωπίνη φύσις οὐσιωδῶς οὐ κέκτηται τῶν μελλόντων τὴν γνῶσιν, ἣ δὲ τοῦ Κυρίου ψυχὴ, διὰ τὴν πρὸς αὐτὸν τὸν Λόγον ἔνωσιν καὶ τὴν ὑποστατικὴν ταυτότητα, κατεπλούτησε μετὰ τῶν λοιπῶν θεοσημεϊῶν καὶ τὴν τῶν μελλόντων γνῶσιν. Et in fine capitis: Ἡμεῖς δὲ Δεσπότην αὐτὸν φαρμέν καὶ Κύριον πάσης τῆς κτίσεως τὸν ἕνα Χριστόν, τὸν αὐτὸν ὁμοῦ Θεόν τε καὶ ἄνθρωπον, καὶ πάντα εἰδέναι. Ἐν αὐτῷ γὰρ εἰσι πάντες οἱ θησαυροὶ τῆς σοφίας καὶ τῆς γνώσεως οἱ ἀπόκρυφοι.

Humana natura in Christo essentialiter non possidet seu obtinet futurorum cognitionem, sed ut Domini anima, propter unionem ad ipsum Deum Verbum, locupletata est cum reliquis divinis praedictionibus etiam futurorum cognitione. Et in fine capitis: Nos ergo dicimus unum Christum, eundemque simul Deum et hominem, omnia scire. In ipso enim omnes thesauri sapientiae et scientiae absconditi sunt.

Das ist: Die menschliche Natur in Christo beß't oder hat nicht wesentlich die Erkenntnis zukünftiger Dinge, sondern als die Seele des Herrn ist sie unter oder neben [neben] andern göttlichen Gaben durch die Vereinigung mit Gott dem Wort auch mit der Erkenntnis zukünftiger Dinge begabt worden. Darum sagen wir, daß der einzige Christus, zugleich Gott und Mensch, alles wißte. Denn in ihm sind alle Schätze der Weisheit und Erkenntnis verborgen.

Idem, lib. 2, cap. 22: Εἰ γὰρ καὶ τῆς ἀγνοούσης τὰ μέλλοντα φύσεως ἦν (ἡ τοῦ Κυρίου ψυχὴ), ἀλλ' ὁμῶς καθ' ὑπόστασιν ἐνωθεῖσα τῷ Θεῷ Λόγῳ, πάντων τὴν γνῶσιν εἶχεν, οὐ χάριτι, ἀλλὰ διὰ τὴν καθ' ὑπόστασιν ἔνωσιν. Et paulo post: Ἐπὶ δὲ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἐπειδὴ μὲν διάφοροι αἱ φύσεις, διάφοροι καὶ αἱ θελήσεις φυσικαί, ἦγον ὁρμητικαὶ δυνάμεις.

Domini anima, etsi secundum se erat naturae futura ignorantis, attamen secundum hypostasim unita Deo Verbo omnium cognitionem habebat, non ex gratia seu participative, sed propter hypostaticam unionem. Et paulo post: Et quia in Domino nostro Iesu Christo naturae differunt, etiam naturales scientiae et voluntates divinitatis et humanitatis etc.

Das ist: Die Seele des Herrn, inwiefern sie für sich selbst eine unwissende Natur war, jedoch nachdem sie mit Gott dem Wort persönlich vereinigt, hat sie alles gewußt, nicht aus Gnaden, sondern von wegen der persönlichen Vereinigung. Gleichwohl, weil zwischen den Naturen ein Unterschied ist, so ist auch usw. [ein Unterschied zwischen dem natürlichen Verstand und Willen der Gottheit und Menschheit].

VI.

Daß nun die Gottheit ihre Majestät, Kraft und Wirkung (welche der göttlichen Natur eigen ist und bleibt) kräftiglich beweise, wirklich erzeige, in, mit und durch dieselbe persönlich vereinigte Menschheit, welche solche Majestät also und daher hat, daß die ganze Fülle der Gottheit in dem angenommenen Fleisch und Blut Christi persönlich wohnt.

Rom. 3, 25: Proposuit Christum propitiatorium per fidem in sanguine eius.

Das ist: Gott hat uns Christum vorge stellt zu einem Gnadenstuhl durch den Glauben in seinem Blut.

Rom. 5, 9: Iustificamur in sanguine eius.

Das ist: Wir werden gerecht durch sein Blut.

Col. 1, 20: In ipso pacificantur omnia per sanguinem crucis eius etc.

VI.

Deitatem nunc maiestatem, potentiam et efficaciam suam (quae Deitatis propria est et manet) efficaciter exserere, in, cum et per humanitatem personaliter sibi unitam, quae maiestatem illam inde consecuta est, quod tota plenitudo Deitatis in assumpta carne et sanguine Christi habet personaliter.

not by possessing in a natural manner the power to burn, but by possessing this from its union with the fire. Therefore in itself it was mortal, and on account of its personal union to the Word, quickening."

The same (cap. 18): "His [Christ's] divine will was both eternal and omnipotent, etc. But His human will not only began in time, but also endured natural and unblamable affections, and naturally was not indeed omnipotent; but as truly and by nature it has become the will also of God the Word, it is also omnipotent." This is, as explained by a commentator: "The divine will has, by its own nature, the power to do all things which it wishes; but Christ's human will does not have power to do everything by its nature, but as united to God the Word."

The same, in the same book, cap. 21: "The human nature does not possess essentially the knowledge of the future; but the soul of the Lord, on account of the union with the Word and the personal identity with the same, was, apart from other divine criteria, rich also in the knowledge of the future."

And at the end of the chapter: "We say that the one Christ, Master, and Lord of all creation, at the same time God and man, knows also all things. For in Him are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge."

The same (lib. 2, cap. 22): "For although it (the soul of the Lord) was of a nature that was ignorant of the future, nevertheless, being personally united to the Word, it had the knowledge of all things, not by grace, but on account of the personal union."

Shortly afterwards: "And since in our Lord Jesus Christ the natures are distinct, the natural wills, that is, the powers of will, are also distinct."

VI.

That now the divine nature powerfully manifests and actually exerts its majesty, power, and efficacy (which is and remains peculiar to the divine nature) in, with, and through the human nature personally united to it; which has such majesty because the entire fulness of the Godhead dwells personally in the assumed flesh and blood of Christ.

Rom. 3, 25: Whom God hath set forth to be a propitiation through faith in His blood.

Rom. 5, 9: Being now justified by His blood.

Col. 1, 20: Having made peace by the blood of His cross, by Him to reconcile all things to Himself.

ATHANASIUS oratione 5 [4] contra Arianos [Epist. ad Adelph. c. Arian, t. 1, f. 161, ed. Colon.]: Quomodo corpus Domini non esset adorabile? Quum Verbum manum suam corporalem extendens sanavit febricitantem, vocem humanam edens suscitaverit Lazarum, manibus suis in cruce protensis principem aëris prostraverit.

Das ist: Warum sollte man den Leib des Herrn nicht anbeten? So doch das Wort, als er seine leibliche Hand ausgestreckt, den Fieberischen gesund gemacht und mit der menschlichen Stimme den Lazarum von Toten erweckt und, als er am Kreuz seine Hände ausgestreckt, den Fürsten in der Luft daniedergeschlagen hat.

Deus Λόγος, unitus homini (concretum pro abstracto), edit miracula et operatur non seorsim aut separatim a natura humana assumpta, sed pro sua bonitate placuit ipsi per assumptam humanitatem, in ea et cum ea propriam divinam suam potentiam operando exercere. Et paulo post: Et humanitatem illam suam ultra et supra propriam ipsius naturam pro suo beneplacito perfectam reddidit, non tamen prohibet, quominus sit animal rationale seu vera humana natura.

Das ist: Gott das Wort, mit dem Menschen (concretum pro abstracto) vereinigt, tut die Wunderwerke und wirkt, aber nicht von der menschlichen Natur absondert, sondern nach seiner Güte hat es ihm gefallen durch die angenommene Menschheit, in derselben und mit derselben seine eigene göttliche Kraft in seinen Werken zu beweisen und zu üben, und hat also diese seine Menschheit weiter und über ihre Natur nach seinem Wohlgefallen vollkommen gemacht, und hindert doch daran nichts, daß es nichtsdestoweniger eine vernünftige Creatur und eine wahrhaftige menschliche Natur sei.

CYRILLUS de Recta Fide ad Theodosium [t. 5 op.]: Anima, unionem sortita ad Verbum descendit in infernum, divina autem virtute et efficacia utens dixit compeditis: Egremini.

VII.

Und daß solche Mitteilung der göttlichen Majestät ohne Vermischung, Vertilgung oder Verleugnung der menschlichen Natur auch in der Herrlichkeit geschehe.

Matth. 16, 27: Filius hominis venturus est in gloria Patris sui.

Das ist: Des Menschen Sohn wird kommen in der Herrlichkeit seines Vaters.

Et Act. 1, 11: Sic veniet, quemadmodum vidistis euntem in coelum.

Das ist: Er wird kommen, wie ihr ihn gesehen habt gen Himmel fahren.

ATHANASIUS, Dialog. 5, De Trinitate [t. 2, f. 257, ed. Colon.]: Καὶ ὑπὲρ τὴν φύσιν τὴν ἰδίαν ἀποτελεῖ τὸ ζῶον εὐδοκίᾳ τῇ ἑαυτοῦ καὶ τὸ ζῶον εἶναι λογικὸν οὐκ ἐκώλυεν.

Humanitatem illam suam supra et ultra propriam ipsius naturam pro suo beneplacito perfectam reddidit, non tamen prohibet, quominus sit animal rationale seu vera humana natura.

THEOPHYLACTUS ex Chrysostomo in caput Matth. 28 [f. 184]: Ἐγώ, ἡ πρῶν κατάκριτος φύσις, κατὰ δὲ τὴν πρὸς Υἱὸν τοῦ Θεοῦ ἀσύγχυτον ἔνωσιν Θεὸς οὐσα, ἔλαβον τὴν ἐξουσίαν κατὰ πάντων.

Ego, prius damnata natura, nunc Deus existens secundum unionem ad Filium Dei absque naturarum confusione, accepi potestatem omnium.

CYRILLUS, lib. 4, cap. 24 [t. 4, f. 337, et 3, f. 783]: Totum corpus suum vivifica Spiritus virtute plenum esse ostendit, non quod naturam carnis amiserit et in Spiritum mutata sit, sed quia cum Spiritu coniuncta totam vivificandi vim hausit.

Das ist: Er hat bewiesen, daß sein ganzer Leib mit der lebendigmachenden Kraft des Geistes erfüllt sei, nicht daß er die Natur des Fleisches von sich gelegt hätte, und daß sie in Geist verwandelt sei, sondern weil sie mit dem Geist vereinigt ist, hat sie die Kraft, lebendig zu machen, empfangen.

Idem, De Incarnatione, cap. 8: In carbone tamquam in imagine licet conspiciere, adunatum [adunitum] quidem humanitati Deum Verbum transformasse assumptam naturam in suam gloriam et operationem. Sicut ignis ligno affixus, ita adunatus [adunitus] est inaestimabiliter humanitati Deus, conferens ei etiam naturae suae operationem.

Das ist: In einer Kohle als in einem Gleichnis kann man sehen, wie die Menschheit mit dem Wort vereinigt sei, daß das Wort die angenommene Natur verwandelt in seine Herrlichkeit und Wirkung. Gleichwie das Feuer, so an dem Holz ist, also ist Gott unermesslicherweise mit der Menschheit vereinigt und hat ihr seine Wirkung mitgeteilt.

ATHANASIUS, Oration 4, Against the Arians (Epist. ad Adelph. c. Arian, t. 1, p. 161, ed. Colon.): "Why should the body of the Lord not be worshiped when the Word, by stretching out His bodily hand, healed the one sick of a fever, and by uttering a human voice raised Lazarus, and by extending His hands upon the cross overthrew the prince of the air?"

The same, Dialog 5, Of the Trinity (t. 2, op. f. 257): "God the Word, having been united to man, performs miracles, not apart from the human nature, but it has pleased Him to work His divine power through it and in it and with it."

And shortly afterwards: "And according to His good pleasure He renders the humanity perfect above its own nature, and did not prevent its being a rational living being [creature, and a true human nature]."

CYRIL, De Recta Fide ad Theodosium (t. 5, op.): "The soul, having obtained union with the Word, descended into hell; but, using its divine power and efficacy, it said to the fettered ones, Go forth."

The same, lib. 1, Ad Reginas: "Christ as God quickens through His own flesh."

VII.

And that this communication of the divine majesty occurs also in glory, without mingling, annihilation, or denial of the human nature.

Matt. 16, 27: The Son of Man shall come in the glory of His Father.

And Acts 1, 11: He shall so come in like manner as ye have seen Him go into heaven.

ATHANASIUS, Dialog 5, Of the Trinity (t. 2, f. 257, ed. Colon.): "And according to His good pleasure He renders the humanity perfect above its own nature, and did not prevent its being a rational living being [creature, and a true human nature]."

THEOPHYLACT, from Chrysostom, on Matt. 28 (p. 184): "I, previously the condemned nature, being God according to the unconfused union with the Son of God, have received power over all things."

CYRIL, lib. 4, cap. 24 (t. 4, p. 377, and 3, f. 783): "He has shown that His entire body is full of the quickening energy of the Spirit, not because it has lost the nature of flesh and been changed into the Spirit, but because, being united with the Spirit, it has acquired the entire power to quicken."

The same, Of the Incarnation, cap. 8: "In a coal, as an illustration, we can see how God the Word, united indeed to humanity, has transformed the assumed nature into its glory and efficacy. As fire adheres to wood, so has God been united to humanity in a manner that cannot be grasped, conferring upon it also the operation of His nature."

THEODORETUS, Dialog. 2 [t. 4, f. 82 et 112]: Καὶ τὸ δεσποτικὸν τοιγαροῦν σῶμα ἀφ' ὧν τὸν μὲν ἀνέστη καὶ ἀπαθὲς καὶ ἀθάνατον, καὶ τῇ θεῇ δόξῃ δεδοξασμένον καὶ παρὰ τῶν ἐπουρανίων προσκυνεῖται δυνάμειον. Σῶμα δὲ ὅμως ἐστὶ, τὴν προίεραν ἔχον περιγραφὴν.

Corpus dominicum surrexit quidem a mortuis incorruptibile, impassibile, immortale, divina glorificatum gloria et a coelestibus adoratur potestatibus; corpus tamen est et habet, quam prius habuit, circumscriptionem.

Das ist: Der Leib des Herrn ist von den Toten erstanden und verklärt worden mit göttlicher Herrlichkeit und wird angebetet von den himmlischen gewaltigen Geistern; und ist gleichwohl ein Leib und ist umschrieben wie zuvor.

Idem Dialogo 3. probat hanc Apollinari sententiam: Si mixtio ignis cum ferro, quae ferum ostendit igneum, ita ut etiam ea faciat, quae sunt ignis, non mutat naturam ferri: neque igitur Dei cum corpore unio est mutatio corporis, licet corpori divinas operationes praebat.

Das ist: Wenn die Vermischung des Feuers mit dem Eisen nicht ändert die Natur des Eisens, welche anzeigt, daß das Eisen Feuer sei, also daß es auch tut und ausstrahlt, was des Feuers Eigenschaft ist, so ist auch die Vereinigung Gottes mit dem Leibe keine Veränderung des Leibes (nach seinem Wesen), wiewohl sie dem Leibe göttliche Wirkungen mittheilt.

Caro Domini locupletata est divinis operationibus propter hypostaticam eius ad Verbum unionem, non passa excidentiam eorum, quae secundum naturam ipsi propria sunt.

Idem lib. 2, cap. 22: Εἰ γὰρ καὶ τῆς ἀγνοούσης τὰ μέλλοντα φύσεως ἦν (ἡ τοῦ Κυρίου ψυχὴ) ἀλλ' ὅμως καθ' ὑπόστασιν ἐνωθεῖσα τῷ Θεῷ Λόγῳ, πάντων τὴν γνώσιν εἶχεν οὐ χάριτι, ἀλλὰ διὰ τὴν καθ' ὑπόστασιν ἔνωσιν. Et paulo post: Ἐπὶ τὲ τοῦ Κυρίου ἡμῶν Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ, ἐπειδὴ μὲν διάφοροι αἱ φύσεις, διάφοροι καὶ αἱ θελήσεις φυσικαί, ἡγουν θελητικαὶ δυνάμεις.

Domini anima, etsi secundum se erat naturae ignorantis futura, attamen secundum hypostasim unita Deo Verbo omnium cognitionem habuit, non ex gratia seu participative, sed propter hypostaticam unionem. Et paulo post: In Domino nostro Iesu Christo, quia naturae differunt, differunt etiam naturales scientiae et voluntates Dominitatis et humanitatis.

Das ist: Die Seele des Herrn, ob sie wohl für sich selbst eine solche Natur ist, die etwas nicht [nicht hat] wissen können, jedoch, weil sie mit dem Wort persönlich vereinigt ist, hat sie aller Dinge Erkenntnis gehabt, und das nicht aus Gnaden, sondern von wegen der persönlichen Vereinigung; und nachdem die Naturen unterschieden bleiben in Christo, so bleibt auch der Unterschied zwischen dem natürlichen Verstand und Willen der Gottheit und der Menschheit.

VIII.

Item, daß die menschliche Natur der göttlichen Majestät, so Gottes eigen ist, theilhaftig und fähig sei nach Art und von wegen der persönlichen Vereinigung.

Col. 2, 9. 3: In ipso inhabitat omnis plenitudo Deitatis corporaliter. In ipso absconditi sunt omnes thesauri sapientiae et cognitionis.

IUSTINUS in Expositione Fidei, p. 182 [f. 389, ed. Colon., 1686]: Καὶ οὐχ οὕτως αὐτὸν ἐν τῷ Πατρὶ λέγομεν, ὡς ἐν τοῖς λοιποῖς, οὐ διὰ τὴν οὐσίαν ἐν τοῖς ἄλλοις γιγνομένην οὐσιόεσθαι, ἀλλὰ διὰ τὸ τῶν δεχομένων μέτρον ἀπονοῦνται τὴν εἰσδοχὴν τὴν θελαν. Nec ita ipsum in Patre, ut in reliquis, esse dicimus, non eo quidem, quod substantia in aliis existens contrahatur, sed propter eorum, qui illam capiunt, modulum, per imbecillitatem suam divinam praesentiam non admittentium. Item: Οὐ γὰρ δέχεται σῶμα ὅπουν ἀκτῖνας Θεότητος. Nam corpus pollutum radios Divinitatis non capit. Et paulo post: Οὕτω μοι νόει τὸν τῆς δικαιοσύνης ἥλιον πᾶσι μὲν ἐπίσης κατ' οὐσίαν, ἅτε δὴ Θεὸν ὄντα, παρεῖναι, ἡμᾶς δὲ πάντας ὁλοὺ ἀσθενεῖς καὶ ληυῶντας τῷ ὀφθαλμῷ τῶν ἁμαρτιῶν τοὺς ὀφθαλμοὺς τὴν εἰσδοχὴν τοῦ φωτὸς ἀπονοῦντας, τὸν δὲ οἰκτιρὸν παῶν, ὀφθαλμὸν καθαρῶτατον καὶ χωροῦντα τοῦ φωτὸς ὅλον τὴν αἴγλην, ἅτε πλασθέντα μὲν ἐκ πνεύματος ἁγίου, ἁμαρτίας δὲ καθάπαξ κεχωρισμένον. Eodem modo mihi considera, iustitiae solem, universis quidem ex aequo substantia, ut qui Deus sit, praesentem esse, nos vero omnes utpote infirmos et peccatorum sordibus lippientes oculis nostris, propter languorem, lucis praesentiam sustinere non posse, proprium vero illius templum oculum purissimum et splendoris universae lucis capacem esse, utpote a Spiritu Sancto formatum et a peccato ex parte segregatum. [Das deutsche Kontorbienduch von 1580 faßt die Stelle aus Justin also zusammen: Omnium creaturarum captus in accipienda divina essentia deficit. Nam corpus pollutum radios Divinitatis non omnes capit, proprium vero Christi templum assumptae naturae, quia tota plenitudo Deitatis in ipsa habitat, totius lucis divinae splendorem capit.]

VIII.

Humanam naturam divinae maiestatis, quae Dei propria est, participem et capacem esse propter unionem et pro modo unionis hypostaticae.

THEODORET, Dialog 2 (t. 4, f. 82 and 112): "And accordingly the body of the Lord arose incorruptible and impassible and immortal, and glorified with divine glory, and is worshiped by the heavenly powers. Nevertheless, it is a body, having the former circumscription."

The same, in Dialog 3, approves this sentence of Apollinarius: "If the mingling of fire with iron, which shows that iron is fire, so that it does also those things that belong to fire, does not change the nature of the iron, neither, therefore, is the union of God with the body a change of the body, although it furnishes the body with divine operations."

DAMASCENUS, lib. 3, cap. 17: "The flesh of the Lord was enriched with divine operations on account of its complete personal union with the Word, in no way having suffered loss with respect to those things that are by nature its own."

The same, lib. 2, cap. 22: "For although it (the soul of the Lord) was of a nature that was ignorant of the future, nevertheless, being personally united to God the Word, it had the knowledge of all things, not by grace, but on account of the personal union." And shortly afterwards: "And since in our Lord Jesus Christ the natures are distinct, the natural wills, that is, the powers of will, are also distinct."

VIII.

Also, that, according to the nature and because of the personal union, the human nature is participant and capable of the divine majesty which belongs to God.

Col. 2, 9. 3: In Him dwelleth all the fullness of the Godhead bodily. In whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge.

JUSTIN, in Expositio Fidei, p. 182 [f. 389, ed. Colon., 1686]: "We do not say that He is in the Father as in the others; not because the essence that is in others is contracted, but because of the limited capacity of those who receive it not being sufficient for the admission of God."

Also: "For a defiled body does not receive rays of divinity."

And shortly afterwards: "Thus consider the Sun of Righteousness in substance equally present to all things, inasmuch as He is God; but that we all, being weak and having eyes dimmed by the filth of sins, are incapable of receiving the light, yet that His own temple, Das ist: Alle Creaturen sind viel zu gering, daß sie das göttliche Wesen begreifen sollten; denn ein unreiner Leib begreift nicht allen Glanz der Gottheit. Aber der eigene Tempel Christi, seine angenommene Natur, weil die ganze Fülle der Gottheit in ihr wohnt, begreift sie den Glanz des ganzen göttlichen Lichts.

ORIGENES, De Principiis, lib. 2, cap. 6 [t. 1. op., f. 698 et 749, ed. Basil.]: Anima Christi tota totum Λόγον recipit atque in eius lucem splendoremque cedit.

Das ist: Die ganze Seele Christi empfängt das ganze Wort und wird in sein Licht und Glanz aufgenommen.

Et lib. 4: Anima Christi, cum Verbo Dei coniuncta, Filii Dei plene capax fuit.

Das ist: Die Seele Christi, so mit dem Wort Gottes vereinigt, ist gänzlich und völlig des Sohnes Gottes fähig.

AUGUSTINUS, Epist. 57: Deus licet omnibus creaturis totus sit praesens ac praecipue in credentibus habitat, non tamen ex toto illum capiunt, sed pro suae capacitatis diversitate alii amplius, alii minus ipsum habent et capiunt. De capite vero nostro Christo apostolus ait: In ipso inhabitat tota plenitudo Deitatis corporaliter.

Das ist: Wiewohl Gott in allen Creaturen ganz gegenwärtig ist und sonderlich in den Gläubigen wohnt, jedoch begreifen sie ihn nicht gänzlich, sondern nach dem Unterschied, daß eine mehr denn die andere seiner fähig ist. Denn etliche haben und empfangen viel, etliche wenig. Aber von unserm Haupt Christo spricht der Apostel: „In ihm wohnet alle Fülle der Gottheit leibhaftig.“

IX.

Wiewohl bekannt und unleugbar, daß die Gottheit samt ihrer göttlichen Majestät nicht räumlich mit dem Fleisch umschrieben, als wenn sie in einem Gefäß eingeschlossen wäre, inmaßen [wie] Athanasius, Origenes, [Gregorius] Nyssenus und andere recht geschrieben, dergleichen auch im Buch der Konfobie (im Buch der Konfobie, fol. 305, p. 2 [Concordia Triglotta, S. 1018]) ausdrücklich als ein Irrtum verworfen wird, wenn gelehrt werden sollte, daß die Menschheit Christi an alle Orte räumlich ausgespannt sei, oder daß die menschliche Natur in Christo durch die persönliche Vereinigung in ein unendlich Wesen verwandelt sei: jedoch, weil die göttliche und menschliche Natur persönlich und unzertrennlich in Christo vereint sind, bezeugen die Heilige Schrift und die heiligen Väter, daß Christus, wo er ist, da sei nicht seine halbe Person oder allein die Hälfte oder nur ein Teil seiner Person, als die Gottheit allein, besonders und bloß, ohne und außer seiner angenommenen und persönlich vereinigten Menschheit, oder von derselben abgesondert und außer der persönlichen Vereinigung mit der Menschheit, sondern seine ganze Person, nämlich als Gott und Mensch, nach Art der persönlichen Vereinigung mit der Menschheit, welche ein unerforschlich Geheimnis ist, allenthalben gegenwärtig sei auf Weiße und Maß, die Gott bekannt ist.

Eph. 4, 10: Ascendit super omnes coelos, ut impleret omnia. Quod Oecumenius ita interpretatur: Καὶ γὰρ καὶ γυννῇ τῇ Θεότητι πάσαι τὰ πάντα ἐπλήρου. Καὶ σαρκωθείς, ἵνα τὰ πάντα μετὰ σαρκὸς πληρώσῃ, κατέβη καὶ ἀνέβη. Etenim nuda quoque Divinitate olim omnia implebat. Et incarnatus, ut omnia cum carne impleret, descendit et ascendit.

Das ist: Er ist aufgefahren über alle Himmel, auf daß er alles erfülle. Welches Oecumenius also erklärt: Denn mit seiner bloßen Gottheit hat er vorlängst alles erfüllt; jetzt aber, nachdem er ist Fleisch [ge]worden, ist er hernieder- und aufgestiegen, auf daß er alles mit dem Fleisch erfülle.

Et THEOPHYLACTUS ibidem [Comment. in Eph., f. 535, ed. Lond. 1636]: Ut omnia impleat dominatione operationeque, idque in carne, quandoquidem Divinitate iam antea cuncta compleret. Haec autem adversus Paulum Samosatenum et Nestorium sunt.

Das ist: Auf daß er alles erfülle mit seiner Herrschaft und Wirkung, und daß im Fleisch, dieweil er schon zuvor mit der Gottheit alles erfüllt hat. Dies aber dient wider die Ketzer Paulum Samosatenum und Nestorium.

LEO, Epist. 10 [Ep. 24, cap. 5, f. 245, et in Serm., f. 121, ed. cit.]: Catholica ecclesia hac fide vivit ac proficit, ut in Christo Iesu nec sine vera Divinitate humanitas, nec sine vera credatur humanitate Divinitas.

IX.

Etsi in confesso est, neque negari potest, Divinitatem una cum sua maiestate divina nequaquam carnis circumscriptione tamquam vase aliquo contineri, quemadmodum Athanasius, Origenes, Nyssenus et alii recte scriperunt, et in Libro Concordiae tamquam errorem reiecit dogma de humanitate Christi in omnibus locis expansa, sive de humana natura in Christo per unionem personalem in infinitam essentiam conversa: quia tamen divina et humana natura personaliter et indissolubiliter in Christo unitae sunt, ideo cum Sacra Scriptura tum sancti patres testantur, ubicunque Christus est, ibi non dimidium aut dimidium illius personam aut partem tantum personae illius, ut Divinitatem solam, seorsim et nude, citra et extra assumptam et personaliter sibi unitam humanitatem vel ab ea separatam et extra personalem cum humanitate unionem, sed totam illius personam, nempe ut Deum et hominem, pro modo personalis cum humanitate unionis, quae imperscrutabile mysterium est, ubique praesentem, ea ratione et modo, qui soli Deo notus est.

His most pure eye, is capable of the splendor of all the light, as it has been formed by the Holy Ghost and is altogether separated from sin."

ORIGEN, De Principiis, lib. 2, cap. 8 (t. 1, op. f. 698 and 749, ed. Basil): "The entire soul of Christ receives the entire Word, and passes [is received] into His light and splendor."

Lib. 4: "The soul of Christ, united to the Word of God, has been fully capable of receiving the Son of God."

AUGUSTINE, Ep. 57: "Although God is present entire to all creatures, and dwells especially in believers, nevertheless they do not entirely receive Him, but, according to the difference in their capacity, some possess and receive Him more, and others less. But of our Head, Christ, the apostle says: In Him dwelleth all the fulness of the Godhead bodily."

IX.

Although it is known and undeniable that the Godhead, together with its divine majesty, is not to be locally circumscribed by the flesh, as though it were enclosed in a vessel, as Athanasius, Origen, Gregory of Nyssa, and others correctly wrote, and as also the Book of Concord [p. 1019] expressly rejects as an error the teaching that the humanity of Christ has been locally expanded into all places, or that, by the personal union, the human nature in Christ has been transformed into an infinite essence,—nevertheless, since the divine and human natures are personally and inseparably united in Christ, the Holy Scriptures and the holy fathers testify that wherever Christ is, there is not half His person, or only one half, or only a part of His person, for instance, the divinity alone, separate and bare, minus and without His assumed humanity personally united thereto or separated from it, and outside of the personal union with the humanity; but that His entire person, namely, as God and man, according to the mode of the personal union with the humanity, which is an inscrutable mystery, is everywhere present in a way and measure which is known to God.

Eph. 4, 10: He ascended up far above all heavens, that He might fill all things. This Oecumenius explains thus: "For, indeed, He long ago filled all things with His bare divinity; and having become incarnate, that He might fill all things with His flesh, He descended and ascended."

And THEOPHYLACT, on the same passage (Comment. in Eph., p. 535, ed. Lond., 1636): "In order that He might fill all things with His dominion and working, and that, in the flesh, since even before He filled all things with His divinity. These things, however, are against Paul of Samosata and Nestorius."

LEO, Epist. 10 (Ep. 24, cap. 5, p. 245, and in Serm., I. 121, ed. cit.): "The Church Catholic lives and advances in this faith, that in

Idem, Serm. 3, De Passione: Hoc catholica fides tradit, hoc exigit, ut in Redemptore nostro duas noverimus convenisse naturas, et manentibus proprietatibus suis tantam factam unitatem utriusque substantiae, ut ab illo tempore, quo in beatae virginis utero Verbum caro factum est, nec Deum illum sine hoc, quod est homo, nec hominem sine hoc liceat cogitare, quod est Deus.

Das ist: Das lehrt der katholische Glaube, und das erfordert er, daß wir wissen sollen, daß in unserm Erlöser zwei Naturen zusammen[ge]kommen seien; und obwohl beider Naturen Eigenschaften bleiben, so seien doch beide Naturen also miteinander vereinigt, daß von der Zeit an, als im Leibe der Jungfrau Maria das Wort ist Fleisch [ge]worden, wir von diesem Gott ohne den Menschen, daß er ist, und von diesem Menschen ohne Gott, daß er ist, nicht gedenken dürfen.

Das ist: Obwohl eine jegliche Natur durch die unterschiedlichen Wirkungen wahrhaftig erwiesen wird, so wird doch keine von der andern abgesondert; denn hier ist keine ohne die andere, sondern Gott hat angenommen den ganzen Menschen und hat sich also ihm und denselben mit sich also vereinigt, daß je eine Natur in der andern sei, und gleichwohl keine ihre Eigenschaft verliere.

Weil aber in diesem Artikel solche Lehre vornehmlich dahin gerichtet ist, wo wir die ganze Person des Mittlers, Gott und Menschen, suchen sollen und ergreifen mögen, so weist uns das Konfessionbuch (im Buch der Konfession, fol. 313. 314 [Conc. Trigl., S. 1042. 1044]) wie auch alle andern reinen Väter nicht auf Holz oder Stein oder anderes, sondern dahin uns Christus in und mit seinem Wort gewiesen und beschieden hat.

Quum autem huius articuli doctrina eo ut, ubi tota persona Mediatoris τοῦ Θεανθρώπου quaeri debeat et apprehendi possit, sciatur, praecipue directa sit, ideo Liber Concordiae, perinde atque omnes alii sancti patres, nos non ad ligna aut lapides aut aliud quid, sed eo, quo nos Christus in et cum Verbo suo, remittit et deducit.

CYRILLUS, lib. 12, in Iohannem, cap. 32 [t. 3, f. 1063, ed. cit.]: In quatuor partes vestimenta Christi divisa sunt, et tunica sola indivisa mansit, quod mysticae cuiusdam rei signum esse dixerim. Nam quatuor orbis partes ad salutem reductae indumentum Verbi, id est, carnem eius impartibiliter inter se partitae sunt. In singulis enim partibiliter transiens Unigenitus, et animam et corpus eorum per carnem suam sanctificans, impartibiliter atque integre in omnibus est, quum unus ubique sit nullo modo divisus.

Das ist: Die Kleider Christi sind in vier Teile geteilt; allein sein Rod ist ungeteilt geblieben, welches ich sagen mag, daß es ein Geheimnis bedeute. Denn nachdem die vier Örter der Welt zur Erkenntnis des Heils gebracht worden sind, haben sie das Kleid des Wortes, das ist, sein Fleisch, also unter sich geteilt, daß es gleichwohl ungeteilt geblieben ist. Denn der eingeborne Sohn Gottes ist unteilbar durch einen jeden insonderheit gegangen und hat ihren Leib und Seele durch sein Fleisch geheiligt und ist also unzerteilt und ganz in allen, diemeil er einig allenthalben und keineswegs geteilt ist.

THEOPHYLACTUS in caput 19 Iohannis [f. 825, ed. cit.]: Το τοίνυν ἅγιον σῶμα τοῦ Χριστοῦ ἀμερίστον ἐστὶ τοῖς τέσσασι τοῦ κόσμου μέρεσι μερίζομενον καὶ διαδιδομενον, κατακερματίζομενος γὰρ ἐν τοῖς καθ' ἓνα καὶ τὴν ἐκάστον ψυχὴν ἀγιάζων μετὰ τοῦ σώματος, Ὁμογενὴς διὰ τῆς ἰδίας σαρκὸς ὁλοκλήρως καὶ ἀμερίστως ἐν ὅλοις ἐστίν, ὑπάρχων πανταχοῦ, οὐδαμῶς γὰρ μεμερίσται, κατὰ καὶ ὁ Παῦλος βοᾷ.

Igitur sanctum Christi corpus indivisibile est et dividitur et communicatur in quatuor partes orbis; distributus enim singulis, et uniuscuiusque animam sanctificans cum corpore per carnem suam, Unigenitus et integer et indivisus in omnibus est, existens ubique, nunquam enim divisus est, sicut et Paulus clamat.

Das ist: Darum, obwohl der heilige Leib Christi unteilbar ist, so wird er doch geteilt und ausgeteilt in die vier Örter der Welt; denn es wird der eingeborne, ganze und unzerteilte Christus einem jeden insonderheit ausgeteilt und heiligt eines jeden Seele mit dem Leibe durch sein Fleisch und ist allenthalben; denn er ist nimmer geteilt, wie auch der Apostel sagt.

CHRYSOSTOMUS [t. 4, f. 1773, ed. Basil., et t. 6, f. 846, ed. Francof.] Homil. 17 ad Ebr., p. 16 (et Ambrosius, cap. 10 ad Hebraeos): Ἐπειδὴ πολλὰ τοῦ προσφέρεται, πολλοὶ Χριστοὶ; μηδὲν ὅμως. Ἄλλ' εἰς πανταχοῦ ὁ Χριστὸς καὶ ἐνταῦθα πλήρης ὢν καὶ ἐκεῖ πλήρης, ἐν σῶμα. Ὅσοι οὖν πολλὰ τοῦ προσφερόμενος, ἐν σῶμα ἐστὶ, καὶ οὐ πολλὰ σώματα, οὕτω καὶ μία θυσία. Ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς ἡμῶν ἐκεῖνος ἐστίν, ὃ τὴν θυσίαν τὴν καθαίρουσαν ἡμᾶς προσεγγκών. Ἐκείνην προσφερόμεν καὶ νῦν, τὴν τότε προσεγγθείσαν, τὴν ἀνάλωτον: τοῦτο εἰς ἀνάμνησιν γίνεται τοῦ τότε γενομένου. Τοῦτο γὰρ ποιεῖτε, φησὶν, εἰς ἐμὴν ἀνάμνησιν. Οὐκ ἄλλην θυσίαν, καθάπερ ὁ ἀρχιερεὺς, ἀλλὰ τὴν αὐτὴν αἰεὶ ποιοῦμεν. Μᾶλλον δὲ ἀνάμνησιν ἐργαζόμεθα θυσίας.

Numquid, quia in multis locis offertur, ideo multi Christi sunt? Nequaquam; sed unus ubique est Christus et hic plenus existens et illic plenus, unum corpus. Quemadmodum enim, Christ Jesus there is believed neither the humanity without the true divinity nor the divinity without the true humanity."

The same, in Discourse 3, On the Passion: "This the catholic faith teaches, this it requires, that we know that in our Redeemer two natures have united, and that, while their properties remained, such a union of both substances has occurred that, from the time in which the Word became flesh in the womb of the Blessed Virgin, we are not to think of God without this, that He is man; nor of man without this, that He is God."

In the same place: "Each nature, by distinct operations, declares its genuineness, but neither separates itself from connection with the other; here nothing belonging to the one is lacking to the other; but God assumed the entire man, and so united Himself to man and man to Himself, that each nature is in the other, and neither passed into the other with the loss of its own attributes."

But since in this article such teaching is especially directed to the end that we may know where we should seek and may apprehend the entire person of the Mediator, God and man, the Book of Concord, as also all other holy fathers, directs us, not to wood or stone or anything else, but to that to which Christ has pointed and directed us in and with His Word.

OYRIL, lib. 2, on John, cap. 32 (t. 3, p. 1063, ed. cit.): "The garments of Christ were divided into four parts, and His mantle alone remained undivided, which, I may say, was a sign of a mystery. For the four quarters of the world, brought to salvation, have shared the garment of the Word, that is, His flesh, among themselves in such a way that it has not been divided. For the Only-begotten, passing into each so as to be shared by each, and sanctifying their soul and body by His flesh, is in all indivisibly and entirely, since, being one, He is everywhere in no manner divided."

THEOPHYLACT, on John, cap. 19 (f. 825, ed. cit.): "Therefore the holy body of Christ is indivisible, being divided and distributed among the four quarters of the earth; for both being distributed among them individually, and sanctifying the soul of each one with the body, the Only-begotten is by His own flesh entirely and indivisibly in all, being everywhere; for He has been in no wise divided, as Paul also exclaims."

CHRYSTOSTOM (t. 4, p. 1773, ed. Basil. and t. 6, f. 846, ed. Frankf.), Homil. 17, Ad Ebr., p. 16 (and Ambrose, cap. 10, Ad Hebraicos): "Since He is offered up in many places, are there many Christs? Not at all. But the one Christ is everywhere, being completely here and completely there, one body. For as He who is offered in many places is one body, and not many bodies, so is He also one sacrifice."

qui in multis locis offertur, unum corpus est et non multa corpora, ita etiam et unum sacrificium. Pontifex autem noster ille est, qui hostiam mundantem nos obtulit; ipsam offerimus et nunc, quae tunc oblata quidem consumi non potest. Hoc in memoriam eius fit, quod tunc factum est. Hoc enim facite, inquit, in mei recordationem. Non igitur aliud sacrificium, quemadmodum summus sacerdos, sed idem semper facimus. Magis autem recordationem sacrificii operamur. (Nota: Contra pontificium sacrificium propitiatorium missae.)

Das ist: Meinst du, weil dies Opfer an viel Orten geopfert wird, daß darum auch viel Christusse sein sollten? Das folgt gar nicht. Denn es ist ein Christus, und derselbe ist allenthalben, hier ganz und dort auch ganz, und ein Leib. Denn wie der ein Leib ist, der allenthalben geopfert wird, und sind nicht viel Leibe, also ist auch nur ein Opfer, welches ein Vorbild und Gedächtnis ist des Opfers, das am Kreuz geopfert worden ist. (Nota: Wider das papistische Veröhnopfer der Opfermesse.)

Schluß.

Diese Zeugnisse der alten Kirchenlehrer, christlicher Väter, sind nicht der Meinung hierher gesetzt worden, daß unser christlicher Glaube auf Ansehen der Menschen gegründet sei. Denn der wahrhaftige seligmachende Glaube auf keines alten oder neuen Kirchenlehrers, sondern einzig und allein auf Gottes Wort gegründet sein soll, so in den Schriften der heiligen Propheten und Apostel, als ungezweifelter Zeugen der göttlichen Wahrheit, begriffen ist. Sondern weil die Irrgeister, durch besondere und geschwinde [unheimliche] List des Satans, die Leute aus der Heiligen Schrift, die, Gott Lob, jeztund auch ein gemeiner Laie nützlich lesen kann, gerne wiederum in der Väter und alten Kirchenlehrer Schriften, als in das weite Meer, führen wollten, auf daß, wer dieselben nicht gelesen hat, demnach auch nicht eigentlich wissen könne, ob sich's mit ihnen und ihren Schriften also halte, wie diese neuen Lehrer derselben Worte anziehen, und also in einem beschwerlichen Zweifel gelassen werden möchten [möchte]: hat man Not halben mit diesem Verzeichniß anzeigen und zum Augenschein allermänniglich [jedermann] weisen müssen, daß diese neue falsche Lehre so wenig in der alten reinen Kirchenlehrer Schriften als in Heiliger Schrift gegründet, sondern derselben stracks zuwider sei. Deren Zeugnisse sie in falschem Verstande, wider der Väter Willen, anziehen, gleichwie sie die dürren, heißen, klaren Worte des Testaments Christi und die lauterer Zeugnisse Heiliger Schrift vorsätzlich und mutwillig verkehren. Derwegen denn das Buch der Konkordie männiglich in die Heilige Schrift und in den einfältigen Katechismus weist. Denn wer sich zu derselben Einsalt mit rechtem einfältigen Glauben hält, der verwahrt seine Seele und Gewissen zum besten, als das auf einem festen und unbeweglichen Felsen gebaut ist. Matth. 7 und 17; Gal. 1; Ps. 119. [* Dresden. Gebrudt durch Matthes Stödel und Simel Bergen. 1580.]

Epilogus.

Haec testimonia priscorum ecclesiae doctorum, lector Christianae religionis amans, non eo consilio huc apposita sunt, quod fides nostra auctoritate hominum velut fundamento nitatur (quum veram et salvificam fidem nullius neque veteris neque recentioris ecclesiae doctoris testimonio, sed solius et unius Dei Verbo in scriptis prophetarum et apostolorum, testium veritatis coelestis maxime ἀξιοτιμωτον, comprehenso, velut fundamento immoto, inniti oporteat), sed quod fanatici spiritus astu diabolico hoc agant, ut homines a scripto Verbo, quod Dei beneficio etiam ab idiotis utiliter nunc legi potest, abductos ad sanctorum patrum et antiquorum ecclesiae doctorum scripta, velut in amplissimum pelagus, deducant, ut, qui ista non legerit, sitne ea piaevetustatis et monumentorum eiusdem sententia, in quam novi illi doctores verba eorum allegant, certo scire nequeat atque hoc pacto in gravi et periculosa dubitatione relinquatur. Quare necessitas nobis imposita fuit hoc catalogo planum faciendi et oculis quasi omnium spectandum exhibendi, quod haec nova falsa doctrina non minus Sacrae Scripturae fundamento quam purioris antiquitatis testimonio destituatur, imo utrique ex diametro repugnet, antiquitatis scilicet dictis in alienam sententiam, pugnantem cum eiusdem mente et intentione, detortis, perinde atque plana et dilucida verba testamenti Christi et perspicua testimonia Scripturae ab iisdem data opera nefaria quadam petulantia depravantur. Qua porro de causa Liber Concordiae unumquemque ad Sacram Scripturam et ad simplicitatem catecheticam deducit, quod qui illam simplici fidei assensione amplectatur, animae et conscientiae suae quam optime consulat, ut quae super firma et immota petra exstructa sit, ut dicitur Matth. 7 et 17; Gal. 1; Ps. 119.

He is that High Priest of ours who has offered the sacrifice that cleanses us. We also now offer that which, having been then offered, was not consumed. This is done in remembrance of that which was then done. 'This do,' says He, 'in remembrance of Me.' For we do not make another sacrifice, as the high priest, but always the same. We rather bring about a remembrance of the sacrifice." (Note: Against the propitiatory sacrifice of the Mass of the Papists.)

Conclusion.

Christian reader, these testimonies of the ancient teachers of the Church have been here set forth, not with this meaning that our Christian faith is founded upon the authority of men. For the true saving faith is to be founded upon no church-teachers, old or new, but only and alone upon God's Word, which is comprised in the Scriptures of the holy prophets and apostles, as unquestionable witnesses of divine truth. But because fanatical spirits, by the special and uncanny craft of Satan, wish to lead men from the Holy Scriptures — which, thank God! even a common layman can now profitably read — to the writings of the fathers and the ancient church-teachers as into a broad sea, so that he who has not read them cannot therefore precisely know whether they and their writings are as these new teachers quote their words, and thus is left in grievous doubt, — we have been compelled by means of this Catalogue to declare, and to exhibit to the view of all, that this new false doctrine has as little foundation in the ancient pure church-teachers as in the Holy Scriptures, but that it is diametrically opposed to it. Their testimonies they quote in a false meaning, contrary to the will of the fathers, just as they designedly and wantonly pervert the simple, plain, and clear words of Christ's testament and the pure testimonies of the Holy Scriptures. On this account the Book of Concord directs every one to the Holy Scriptures and the simple Catechism; for he who clings to this simple form with true, simple faith provides best for his soul and conscience, since it is built upon a firm and immovable Rock, Matt. 7 and 17; Gal. 1; Ps. 119.

Visitation Articles.

Article I.

Of the Holy Supper.

The pure and true doctrine of our churches concerning the Holy Supper:

I. That the words of Christ: Take, eat, this is My body; drink, this is My blood, are to be understood simply and according to the letter, as they read.

II. That in the Sacrament there are two things which are given [tendered] and received with one another: one earthly, which is bread and wine; and one heavenly, which is the body and blood of Christ.

III. That this [union, tendering and taking] occurs here on earth, and not above in heaven.

IV. That it [what is tendered and received] is the true natural body of Christ which hung on the cross, and the true natural blood which flowed from the side of Christ.

V. That the body and blood of Christ are received not only by faith spiritually, which can also occur outside of the Supper, but here with the bread and wine orally, yet in an inscrutable and supernatural manner [and that] for a pledge and assurance of the resurrection of our bodies from the dead.

VI. That the oral partaking of the body and blood of Christ is done not only by the worthy, but also by the unworthy, who approach without repentance and true faith; nevertheless, with a different result: by the worthy for salvation, by the unworthy for judgment.

Article II.

Of the Person of Christ.

The pure and true doctrine of our churches on this article concerning the Person of Christ:

I. In Christ there are two distinct natures, the divine and the human. These remain to eternity unconfused and unseparated [inseparable (or undivided)].

II. These two natures are personally so united with one another that there is only one Christ, [and] one person.

III. Because of this personal union it is rightly said, and it is so also in deed and truth, that God is man, and man God, that Mary bore the Son of God, and God redeemed us with His own blood.

IV. Through this personal union and the exaltation that followed upon it, Christ, ac-

Fleisch zur Rechten Gottes gesetzt und hat empfangen allen [alle] Gewalt im Himmel und auf Erden, ist auch aller göttlichen Majestät, Ehre, Kraft und Herrlichkeit theilhaftig [ge] worden.

Der dritte Artikel.

Von der heiligen Taufe.

Die reine, wahrhaftige Lehre unserer Kirchen von diesem Artikel der heiligen Taufe:

I. Daß nur eine Taufe sei und eine Abwaschung, nicht welche die Unsauberkeit des Leibes pflegt hinwegzunehmen, sondern [welche] uns von Sünden wäscht.

II. Durch die Taufe als das Bad der Wiedergeburt und Erneuerung des heiligen Geistes macht uns Gott selig und wirkt in uns solche Gerechtigkeit und Reinigung von Sünden, daß, wer in solchem Bund und Vertrauen bis an das Ende beharrt, nicht verloren wird, sondern das ewige Leben hat.

III. Alle, die in Christum Jesum getauft sind, die sind in seinen Tod getauft und durch die Taufe mit ihm in seinen Tod begraben und haben Christum angezogen.

IV. Die Taufe ist das Bad der Wiedergeburt, darum daß in derselben wir von neuem geboren und mit dem Geiste der Kindheit versiegelt und besignet werden.

V. Es sei denn, daß jemand geboren werde aus dem Wasser und Geist, so kann er nicht in das Reich Gottes kommen. Doch ist der Nothfall hiezu nicht gemeint.

VI. Was vom Fleisch geboren ist, das ist Fleisch, und von Natur sind wir alle Kinder des Zorns Gottes; denn aus sündlichem Samen sind wir erzeugt, und in Sünden werden wir alle empfangen.

Der vierte Artikel.

Von der Gnadenwahl und ewiger Vorsehung Gottes.

Die reine und wahrhaftige Lehre unserer Kirchen von diesem Artikel:

I. Daß Christus für alle Menschen gestorben [ist] und als das Lamm Gottes der ganzen Welt Sünde getragen hat.

II. Daß Gott niemand zur Verdammnis geschaffen, sondern will, daß allen Menschen geholfen werde und sie zur Erkenntnis der Wahrheit kommen. Befiehlt allen, daß sie seinen Sohn Christum in dem Evangelio hören sollen, und verheißt dadurch Kraft und Wirkung des Heiligen Geistes zur Befehrung und Seligskeit.

III. Daß viele Menschen durch ihre eigene Schuld verdammt werden, die entweder das Evangelium von Christo nicht hören wollen oder aus der Gnade wieder [her]ausfallen, durch Irrtum wider das Fundament oder durch Sünde wider das Gewissen.

IV. Daß alle Sünder, so Buße tun, zu Gnaden angenommen, und keiner ausgeschlossen werde, wenn seine Sünden gleich blutrot wären, fintermal Gottes Barmherzigkeit viel größer ist denn aller Welt Sünde, und Gott sich aller seiner Werke erbarmt.

Articulus III.

De S. Baptismo.

Pura et vera doctrina nostrarum ecclesiarum de hoc articulo s. baptismatis:

11] I. Quod unum tantum baptisma sit et una ablutio, non quae sordes corporis tollere solet, sed quae nos a peccatis abluit.

12] II. Per baptismum tamquam lavacrum illud regenerationis et renovationis Spiritus Sancti salvos nos facit Deus et operatur in nobis talem iustitiam et purgationem a peccatis, ut, qui in eo foedere et fiducia usque ad finem perseverat, non pereat, sed habeat vitam aeternam.

13] III. Omnes, qui in Christum Iesum baptizati sunt, in mortem eius baptizati sunt et per baptismum cum ipso in mortem eius consequuti sunt et Christum induerunt.

Articulus IV.

De Praedestinatione et Aeterna Providentia Dei.

Pura et vera doctrina nostrarum ecclesiarum de hoc articulo:

17] I. Quod Christus pro omnibus hominibus mortuus sit et ceu agnus Dei totius mundi peccata sustulerit.

18] II. Quod Deus neminem ad condemnationem condiderit, sed velit, ut omnes homines salvi fiant et ad agnitionem veritatis perveniant; propterea omnibus mandat, ut Filium suum Christum in evangelio audiant, et per hunc auditum promittit virtutem et operationem Spiritus Sancti ad conversionem et salutem.

according to His flesh, has been placed at God's right hand, and has received all power in heaven and on earth, and has become partaker of all divine majesty, honor, power, and glory.

Article III.

Of Holy Baptism.

The pure and true doctrine of our churches concerning this article of Holy Baptism:

I. That there is but one Baptism and one washing [ablution] — not such as is wont to remove the filth of the body, but [such as] washes us from sins.

II. Through Baptism, as the washing of regeneration and renewing of the Holy Ghost, God saves us, and works in us such righteousness and cleansing from sins that he who perseveres in this covenant and confidence unto the end is not lost, but has eternal life.

III. All who are baptized into Christ Jesus are baptized into His death, and through Baptism are buried with Him into His death, and have put on Christ.

IV. Baptism is the washing of regeneration for the reason that in it we are born anew, and sealed with and graciously [by grace] given the Spirit of adoption.

V. Except a man is born of water and the Spirit, he cannot enter into the kingdom of God. However, this does not refer to a case of necessity.

VI. That which is born of the flesh is flesh, and by nature we all are the children of God's wrath, for we are begotten of sinful seed and are all conceived in sins.

Article IV.

Of Predestination and the Eternal Providence of God.

The pure and true doctrine of our churches concerning this article:

I. That Christ has died for all men, and as the Lamb of God has borne the sins of the whole world.

II. That God created no one for condemnation, but will have all men to be saved, and to come to the knowledge of the truth. [Therefore] He commands all to hear His Son Christ in the Gospel, and promises by it [through such hearing] the power and working of the Holy Ghost for conversion and salvation.

III. That many men are condemned [perish] by their own guilt, who are either unwilling to hear the Gospel of Christ, or again fall from grace, [whether] by error against the foundation or by sins against conscience.

IV. That all sinners who repent are received into grace, and no one is excluded, even though his sins were as scarlet, since God's mercy is much greater than the sins of all the world, and God has compassion on all His works.

Falsche und irrige Lehre der Calvinisten

Von heiligen Nachtmahl:

I. Daß obgesetzte Worte Christi figürlichweise zu verstehen seien und nicht, wie sie lauten.

II. Daß im Abendmahl nur bloße Zeichen seien, aber der Leib Christi sei so weit von dem Brot als der höchste Himmel von der Erde.

III. Daß Christus allda gegenwärtig sei nur mit seiner Kraft und Wirkung und nicht mit seinem Leibe; gleichwie die Sonne mit ihrem Scheine und Wirkung hienieden auf Erden gegenwärtig und kräftig ist, aber die Sonne selbst ist droben im Himmel.

IV. Daß es ein typicum corpus, ein figürlicher Leib, sei, der nur bedeutet und vorgebildet werde.

V. Daß er allein mit dem Glauben, welcher sich hinauf in den Himmel schwingt, und nicht mündlich empfangen werde.

VI. Daß ihn allein die Würdigen empfangen, die Unwürdigen aber, so solchen Glauben nicht haben, der hinauf in den Himmel steigen kann, nichts denn Brot und Wein empfangen.

Falsche und irrige Lehre der Calvinisten

Von der Person Christi,

so vornehmlich wider den dritten und vierten Artikel seiner Lehre streiten:

I. Erstlich, daß Gott Mensch ist und der Mensch Gott sei, daß sei eine figürliche Rede.

II. Daß die Menschheit mit der Gottheit nicht in der That und Wahrheit, sondern allein nach dem Namen und Worten Gemeinschaft habe.

III. Daß [es] Gott unmöglich sei, mit aller seiner Allmacht zu verschaffen, daß Christi natürlicher Leib auf einmal [zu gleicher Zeit] mehr denn an einem Orte sei.

IV. Daß Christus nach seiner Menschheit durch seine Erhöhung allein erschaffene Gaben und gemeffene Gewalt empfangen habe und nicht alles wisse und vermöge.

V. Daß Christus nach seiner Menschheit abwesend regiere, gleichwie der König in Hispanien über die neuen Inseln regiert.

VI. Daß [es] eine verdammlische Abgötterei sei, wenn man das Vertrauen und den Glauben des Herzens auf Christum nicht allein nach seiner Gottheit, sondern auch nach seiner Menschheit setzt und die Ehre der Anrufung darauf richtet.

Falsche und irrige Lehre der Calvinisten

Von der heiligen Taufe:

I. Die Taufe sei ein äußerlich Wasserbad, damit [mit welchem] eine innerliche Abwaschung von Sünden allein bedeutet werde.

II. Die Taufe wirke oder gebe nicht die Wiedergeburt, den Glauben, Gnade Gottes und Seligskeit, sondern bezeichne und versiegle allein dieselbe.

III. Nicht alle, die mit Wasser getauft werden, erlangen hiermit die Gnade Christi oder Gabe des Glaubens, sondern allein die Auserwählten.

Sequitur falsa et erronea doctrina Calvinistarum

De Sacra Coena:

21] I. Quod supra posita verba Christi figurate intelligenda sint et non secundum litteram, sicut sonant.

22] II. Quod in Coena tantum nuda signa sint, corpus autem Christi tam procul a pane quam supremum coelum a terra.

23] III. Quod Christus illic praesens sit tantum virtute et operatione sua et non corpore suo; quemadmodum sol splendore et operatione sua in terris praesens et efficax est, corpus autem solare superius in coelo existit.

24] IV. Corpus Christi esse typicum corpus, quod pane et vino tantum significetur et praefigetur.

25] V. Quod sola fide, quae in coelum se elevet, et non ore accipiatur.

Falsa et erronea doctrina Calvinistarum

De Persona Christi,

quae potissimum III. et IV. Articulo purioris doctrinae repugnat:

27] I. Quod Deus Homo et Homo Deus est, esse figuratam locutionem.

28] II. Quod humana natura cum divina non in re et veritate, sed tantum nomine et verbis communionem habeat.

31] V. Quod Christus secundum humanitatem absens regnet, sicut rex Hispaniae novas insulas regit.

32] VI. Quod damnabilis idololatria sit, si fiducia et fides cordis in Christum non solum secundum divinam, sed etiam secundum humanam ipsius naturam collocetur, et honor adorationis ad utramque dirigatur.

Falsa et erronea doctrina Calvinistarum

De Sacro Baptismo:

33] I. Baptismus esse externum lavacrum aquae, per quod interna quaedam ablutio a peccatis tantum significetur.

34] II. Baptismus non operari neque conferre regenerationem, fidem, gratiam Dei et salutem, sed tantum significare et obsignare ista.

35] III. Non omnes, qui aqua baptizantur, consequi eo ipso gratiam Christi aut donum fidei, sed tantum electos.

False and Erroneous Doctrine of the Calvinists

Concerning the Holy Supper:

I. That the words of Christ cited above are to be understood in a figurative way, and not as they read.

II. That in the Supper there are only bare signs, the body of Christ, however, being as far from the bread as the highest heaven is from the earth.

III. That Christ is present there only by His power and working, and not with His body, just as the sun is present and efficacious here below on earth by its brilliancy and working, while the sun itself is above in the sky.

IV. That it is a typicum corpus, a figurative body, which is only signified and prefigured [by the bread and wine].

V. That it is received by faith alone, which soars [elevates itself] into heaven, and not orally.

VI. That only the worthy receive it; the unworthy, however, who have not such faith as can ascend into heaven receive nothing but bread and wine.

False and Erroneous Doctrine of the Calvinists

Concerning the Person of Christ, which conflicts especially with the Third and Fourth Articles of the pure doctrine:

I. In the first place, that the expression, "God is man," and, "Man is God," is figurative.

II. That the human nature has communion with the divine not in deed and truth, but only in name and words.

III. That it is impossible for God, with all His omnipotence, to cause the natural body of Christ to be at the same time [simultaneously and instantaneously] in more than one place.

IV. That by His exaltation Christ, according to His human nature, has received only created gifts and finite power, and neither knows nor can do all things.

V. That Christ, according to His human nature, rules absently, just as the King of Spain rules the new islands.

VI. That it is damnable idolatry if the confidence and faith of the heart is placed in Christ not only according to His divine, but also according to His human nature, and the honor of adoration is directed to it [to both natures].

False and Erroneous Doctrine of the Calvinists

Concerning Holy Baptism:

I. That Baptism is an outward washing of water, whereby an inner washing [ablution] from sins is only signified.

II. That Baptism neither works nor confers regeneration, faith, the grace of God, and salvation, but only signifies and seals these.

III. That not all who are baptized with water, but only the elect, receive therewith the grace of Christ or the gift of faith.

IV. Die Wiebergeburt geschehe nicht in und bei der Taufe, sondern erst hernach bei erwachsenen Jahren, in etlichen auch wohl gar im Alter.

V. Die Seligkeit hange nicht an der Taufe, daher denn auch die Rotttaufe in der Kirche nicht soll gestattet werden, sondern wenn man den Kirchen dienst nicht haben mag [kann], soll das Kindlein immer[hin] ohne Taufe sterben.

VI. Der Christen Kinder sind heilig vor der Taufe und von Mutterleibe an, ja noch in ihrer Mutter Leib in dem Bunde des ewigen Lebens; sonst könnte ihnen die heilige Taufe nicht mitgeteilt werden.

Falsche und irrige Lehre der Calvinisten
Von der Gnadenwahl und Vorsehung Gottes:

I. Daß Christus nicht für alle Menschen, sondern allein für die Auserwählten gestorben sei.

II. Daß Gott den meisten Teil der Menschen zum [zur] ewigen Verdamnis geschaffen und wolle nicht haben, daß sie bekehrt und selig werden.

III. Daß die Auserwählten und Reugeborenen nicht können den Glauben und Heiligen Geist verlieren und verdammt werden, wenn sie gleich allerlei große Sünden und Laster begehen.

IV. Die, so nicht erwählt sind, müssen verdammt werden und können nicht zur Seligkeit kommen, wenn sie gleich tausendmal getauft würden und täglich zum Abendmahl gingen, auch so heilig und unsträflich lebten, als es immer möglich.

Falsa et erronea doctrina Calvinistarum

De Praedestinatione et Providentia Dei:

39] I. Christum non pro omnibus hominibus, sed pro solis electis mortuum esse.

40] II. Deum potissimam partem hominum ad damnationem aeternam creasse et nolle, ut potissima pars convertatur et vivat.

42] IV. Eos vero, qui electi non sunt, necessario damnari, nec posse pervenire ad salutem, etiamsi millies baptizarentur et quotidie ad eucharistiam accederent, praeterea vitam tam sancte atque inculpate ducerent, quantum unquam fieri potest.

IV. That regeneration occurs not in and at [with] Baptism, but not till afterwards in adult years, and in some [many] not until old age.

V. That salvation depends not upon Baptism, and accordingly emergency baptism [baptism in case of necessity] should not be permitted in the Church, but if the service of the Church [of the ordinary ministry of the Church] cannot be obtained, the child should be allowed to die without Baptism.

VI. That children of Christians are holy before Baptism and from their mothers' wombs; yea, that while still in their mothers' wombs they are [established] in the covenant of eternal life; otherwise holy Baptism could not be administered to them.

False and Erroneous Doctrine of the Calvinists

Concerning Predestination and the Providence of God:

I. That Christ died, not for all men, but only for the elect.

II. That God created the greater part of men for eternal condemnation, and is unwilling that they be converted and saved.

III. That the elect and regenerate cannot lose faith and the Holy Ghost and be condemned, even though they commit great sins and crimes of every kind.

IV. That they who are not elect must be condemned, and cannot attain salvation, even though they be baptized a thousand times and daily go to the Lord's Supper, and also live in as holy and irreproachable a way as ever possible.

* This index serves for both the Latin and German, and the English text. The references are to the original text. The English passage, as a rule, is found on the opposite page, rarely on the preceding page or the page following. In a few instances the reference is to the English page, because the citation is more conspicuous on that page.

Was es ist 554; 754, 8; 978, 20; e. wahres Sacr. 308, 4; e. Sacr., das Glauben fordert 414, 90; d. Sacr. d. Leibes und Blutes Christi 578, 20; eine Speise d. Seele 756, 23; tägliche Nahrung d. Glaubens 176, 89; 262, 42; 360, 10; 758, 24; darin ist d. ganze Evang. u. d. Glaube 760, 32; nicht aber e. satisfactio ex opere operato 414, 90; 176, 89. 143. 155.

Wirkung od. Nutzen 556, 5 ff.; 756, 20 ff. 70; hat zweierlei Effect od. Nutzen 410, 75; vereinigt uns mit Christo 360, 10; 1072, 79; stärkt d. Wie Paulus davon lehrt 246, 54; Christus 246, 56 ff.; wie es bei d. ersten Christen gehalten wurde 412, 86; hinsichtlich der öffentlichen Sünden 284, 17.

Wie bei den Evangelischen (Lutherischen) 64; 68; 326, 42; 382, 1. 49; niemand darf es reichen ohne ordentl. Verusf 48; 314, 24; sich selbst kommunizieren 464, 8; die Verwaltung desf. gehört zum Amt d. Schlüssel 84; von d. Konsekration beim Abendmahl 810, 8 f.; 998, 73 ff. 121.

Vom rechten Gebrauch desf. 406; Vereitung dazu 556, 10; 760, 36; 812, 20; soll empf. w. im Glaub. a. d. Gnade u. Vergeltg. d. Sünden 312, 21; 414, 90; 996, 69 f.; d. Glaube wird vor allem erfordert 48; 68; 414, 90; 556, 10; Dankagung 410, 76; wer dazu geschickt und würdig 408, 73; 556, 10; 760, 33; 812, 20; 996, 69 f. 123 ff.; wer unwürdig 556, 10; 766, 61; 812, 18; 996, 68; diese empfangen es zum Gericht 248, 62; 976, 16. 57. 60; welche auszuschließen sind 248, 61; 766, 58; nicht alle sind jederzeit gleich geschickt 248, 62.

Darum soll man niemand zwingen, noch Zeit u. Ort vorschreiben 534, 13. 21; 762, 42. 47; sonst macht man ein Gesetz und ein Gift daraus 538, 25; bloß vermahnen 760, 39; so Christus selbst 762, 45; d. Segen d. Sacraments recht vorstellen 538, 24; zuvor verhören, unterrichten, absolvieren 68; 382, 1. 49; denn ein Verstand der christlichen Lehre ist dazu nötig 574, 5.

Dazu soll uns treiben die eigene Not 536, 23; 768, 71; wer es nicht jährl. begehrt, ist kein Christ 536, 22 f.; Rat f. die, welche an ihrer Würdigkeit zweifeln 764, 55 f. 62. 70; welche kein Verlangen fühlen 770, 75; viele empfangen es jed. Sonntag 324, 40.

Christus wird erkannt durch d. Predigt 688, 38; 918, 11; 950, 2; angeboten durch d. Ev. 272, 76; ihn sollen wir im Ev. hören 1152, 18.

Christus allein (nicht auch d. Heiligen) ist a n z u r u f e n 56 f.; 346, 18; denn an ihm haben wir alles viel besser als an d. Heil. 468, 25; ihm sollen wir vertrauen 276, 87; 350, 31; 430, 34; 918, 11; ihn bekennen, ist ein Lobopfer 394, 33;

„durch Christum“ usw. ist d. Schluß aller Kirchengebete 224, 264; „um Christus' willen“, das heißt, im Namen Christi 268, 65.

Christus ist hoch über unsere Werke usw. z. setzen 170, 57; 194, 143. 159; 274, 78; 926, 35; verwirft die Werke 164; 212 f.; 214, 218; doch hat er Verheißungen an gute Werke geheftet 194, 143. 154; außer ihm gelten d. Wohltat kennen 150, 101; sich f. Leidens trösten 140, 69; f. Christo sollen wir eigen sein und dienen 544, 4; aber nicht nach Menschengeboten 426, 23. 69; 462, 2; 500; 828, 3; 1054, 8.

Ohne Christum zwar einigermaßen e. ehrb. Leben 156, 9; aber keine Gerechtigkeit und Versöhnung 186, 118. 121; f. Geßezes 210, 212; find Tod u. Sünde uns. Herren 896, 43.

Gegen d. Selbstgerechtigkeit. Nach Christo sehnt sich keiner, der nicht f. Zammer erkannt hat 112, 33; er hilft uns nichts, wir bedürfen seiner nicht, wenn wir selbst gerecht w. könnten 106, 10; 122, 12. 29. 52. 87; 182, 110. 136. 170; 272, 75; 316, 8; 478, 11; wenn Maria helfen könnte 348, 27, dann dürften d. Widers. d. Verheißg. v. Christo abtun 180, 102; ihn verlieren, die durchs Geßez gerecht w. wollen 128, 30; die zweifeln, erfahren nicht, was Christus sei 278, 89; f. Erkenntnis d. größte Trost in d. Ansehtg. u. im Tode 136, 60; 154, 119; f. Ehre fördert d. Artikel v. d. Rechtfert. 120, 2; um diese streiten die Evangelischen 182, 109.

Geistliche Finsternis bezüglich Christi. An Chr. denkt d. Vernunft nicht 482, 18; d. Welt glaubt nicht an ihn 180, 91; von ihm liest man nichts in d. Büchern d. Summisten 250, 66. 68; lehren d. Defretalen nichts 474, 14; war im Papsttum f. Rebe 482, 14. 20; er (f. Gnade, Verdienst) w. durch Menschenfakungen verdunkelt 70; 78 f.; 88, 36; 316, 5; er wird begrab., unterdrückt, verunehrt, gelästert durch d. Weltlehre 52; 72, 16; 80 f.; 124, 18; 126, 24. 28; 162, 29. 36. 40. 44. 61. 83. 92 ff. 136. 143. 148. 156. 196. 203. 211. 240; 222; 252, 2; 274, 77 f.; 294, 43; 314, 4. 9. 18; 338, 81; 376, 46; 422, 11. 17. 40. 54; 500; 516, 44; 804, 11; durch d. 192, 135. 148. 251; 334, 72; 892, 32; d. guten Werke gefallen Gott a. Gnaden 222, 260; wenn auch unvollkommen, durch Christum 968, 23; um
d. Glaubens w. 190, 131. 148. 172. 187. 254. 264;
weil d. Person Gott gefällt durch den Glauben 940, 8; nur an denen, welchen d. Sünden ver-geben sind 220, 246; nur ein reiner Gehorsam 968, 22; d. Einigkeit 836, 23; d. Stand d. Obrig-

Gegenwart, auf Gegenwart u. Zukunft geht d.
Glaube 206, 191; Christus ist als Gott u. Mensch allen Kreaturen gegenwärtig 820, 16; 1024, 27.
81; Trost daraus 1046, 87; d. leibl. Gegenwart
Christi im Abendmahl wird bekannt 46; 246;
492; 554; 578; 752 f.; 808, 2. 6. 974, 9 ff.;
Gründe dafür 810, 10; 1004, 93. 106; 820, 17;
1024, 29; ist e. Geheimnis 816; geben d. Sakramentierer nur z. Schein zu 808, 4; 972, 3 ff. 18.
113; oder leugnen es geradezu 808, 3; 970, 2 f.;
leugnen die Gegenwart Christi auf Erden über-

Christo unmöglich sei 1012, 120; (824, 30); 1048, 92; 1154, 29; od. schreiben sie im Abendmahl nur
d. Glauben zu 814, 35; 972, 6. 59. 88. 121; diese Gegenwart nicht bewirkt durch das Sprechen des Priesters 810, 8; 998, 74; nicht durch d. Glauben
d. Kommunikanten 1002, 88; sond. durch d. allmächt. Wort Christi 810, 8. 35; 998, 74 f. 106;
sie ist nicht irdisch od. kapernaitisch 820, 17; kann auf dreierlei Weise stattfinden 1004, 98 ff.; doch bei d. menschl. Natur nicht so wie bei d. göttlichen 1046, 90; v. d. Gegenwart d. h. Geistes soll man nicht ex sensu urteilen 56, 56.

Irrtum v. d. räuml. Einschränkung d. Lei-bes Christi 1012, 119; v. d. räuml. Ausspannung dess. 824, 29; 1048, 92; daß Christi Gegenwart auf Erden sich nur auf s. göttl. Natur beziehe 824, 32; 1014, 2. 94; daß Christus im Abendmahl nur m. f. Kraft, nicht aber m. f. Leibe gegen-wärtig sei 1154, 23.

Geheimnis des Glaubens ist die Gegenwart
Christi im Sacrament 816; 1014; 822, 18.

Gehör, aus dem, kommt d. Glaube 138 f.; 260;
308; 786; 900; 1084; 1086, 76; ohne das. zieht
Gott d. Menschen nicht zu sich 788, 13.

Gehorsam, neuer, 46; diesen find alle Menschen
Gott schuldig 938, 4; ohne Zwang 806, 7; 962, 2; ist d. Wunsch d. Gläubigen 996, 69; unj. Gehors-sam nicht, wie er sein soll, u. macht also nicht gerecht 162, 30; 206; 300, 63; welches d. rechte G.

Unsern Gehorsam zeigen in Kreuz u. Trübsal, in Anfechtungen u. im Tode 120, 8; 168, 46; 300, 63; 326, 45; das ist e. Frucht d. Glaubens 190, 128; christl. Vollkommenheit 436, 49; dazu nüt. e. wiedergeb. Herz 156, 4; 178, 98. 172. 190; die Wiedergeborenen sind ihn schuldig 796, 3. 10; ihr G. durch d. Glauben Gott gefällig 206, 187; „gerecht sein heißt Gehorsam“: falsche Folgerung 206 (unt.); gehört nicht z. Rechtfertigung 932, 51; ist jedoch e. angefangene Gerechtigkeit 926, 32; 164, 38. 60; was Geseß, was Gv. dazu tue 964, 10 ff.; Irrtum verworfen 796, 21; 840, 22; 908, 75; 1100, 30.

Vom Gehorsam gegen d. Eltern 540, 8; 608 ff.; hat Gott nächst f. Majestät Gehorsam gesetzt 614, 116; Gehorsam gegen Vorgesetzte u. Obrigkeit 50; 540, 8; 620, 141 ff. 150; auch d. heidn. Obrigkeit 330, 55; darin zeigen Christen ihre Liebe 330, 55; Gott mehr gehorchen als Menschen (Bischöfen) 50; 94, 75: 314, 25; 448, 21; 514, 38; e. keiserlichen Papst nicht 514, 38. 57.

Geist, Heiliger 30; 32; 34; 42; 460; 544; 576; 686: d. dritte Person d. dreieinigen Gottheit 32; Gott 32; der Herr 32; 34; Geist Gottes 160; 336, 73; 686, 36; Geist Christi 220, 251; 226, 5. 16. 18; was die Sakramentierer unter „Geist Christi“ verstehen 808, 5; 972, 5. 11. 103; Geist d. Herrn 210, 208; 428, 27; nicht „erschaffene Regung in Kreaturen“ 42; nicht gemacht noch geschaffen, sond. v. Vater u. Sohn ausgehend 32; 34; 460; 1040, 73; ist unermesslich, ewig, allmächtig 32; wird angebetet m. d. Vater u. Sohn 32; auf f. Namen geschieht d. Taufe 550; 576 f.; 732; in f. Namen werden Sünden vergeben 554, 28.

Ihn hat Jesus verheißten durch d. Gv. 160, 18; 228, 9; 258, 29; gibt Christus 158, 12. 109; 328, 54; wird um Christi u. geschenkt 158, 11; 550, 10; nicht nur d. Alten, sond. auch d. Kindern 244, 52 f.

Er wird durch d. Wort u. d. Sakramente erlangt 44; 50; 84; 494, 3; durch d. Taufe 112, 35; 742, 41; durch d. Gv. 158, 14; 270, 71 f.; in d. Gemeinschaft der Kirche 228, 8; 686, 37; durch d. Glauben 54 f.; 132, 45. 86. 116; 156, 4. 6. 12. 54. 61. 172; 342, 92; aus Gnaden, nicht um der Werke w. 340, 90; ihn empfangen d. durch den Glauben Neugeborenen 274, 82; schon auf Erden 230, 15.

Er wirkt durch das Amt d. N. L. 404, 59; durch d. Kirche 686, 37; nicht ohne Mittel 786, 4. 13; 910, 80; durch d. Wort 262, 44; 692, 58; 494, 3; 786, 4. 19; 880, 5; 908, 71; durch das Wort u. äußere Zeichen 408, 70; durch Wort u. Sakrament 784, 1. 18; 886, 16; 900, 48. 65; 918, 16; aber nicht durch d. Geseß 964, 11; doch braucht er es z. Strafe u. Ermahnung 966, 14; er macht (baut) d. Kirche 688, 45. 51; die e. Gemeinschaft d. G. Geistes im Herzen ist 226, 5. 10; 230, 16. 28. 31; durch ihn haben d. Propheten geweissagt 496, 13; f. Amt d. 686, 35. 59; beruft uns durch f. Gv. 544, 6; 894, 40; hebt d. Wirkung d. Gaben, Tugenden, Früchte 158, 12. 128. 172; 236, 31. 36; 342, 92; 806, 5; Liebe Gottes u. d. Nächsten 922, 23; gute Werke 170, 51. 61; überh. Früchte d. Geistes 966, 17; diese sind Zeugnisse f. Gegenwart 798, 15; er treibt die Gerechtfertigten 220, 251; 906, 63 f.; 966, 17; doch ihn zieht Gott 790, 17; durch f. Hilfe überwinden wir alles Übel, Versuchungen d. Teufels 160, 18; f. Instrument u. Werkzeug ist d. bekehrte menschl. Wille 790, 18; er segnet d. tägl. Übung d. Katechismus 568, 9; doch empfangen wir in diesem Leben allein f. Erstlinge 906, 68; durch ihn überschüttet uns d. Vater m. ew. Gütern 682, 24; er weckt alle Toten auf 544, 6.

Wo nicht gegenwärtig. Er ist nicht da, wo nicht Liebe und andere Früchte sind 178, 98; ohne sie wird er verloren 80, 99. 103; 340, 90; vor d. Schein d. Geistes Gottes gewarnt 968, 20; wird betrübt, wo nicht g. Werke geschehen 304, 77; 1076, 42; regiert d. Gottlosen nicht 230, 16; wird d. vorsägl. u. beharrl. Widerstrebenden nicht gegeben 788, 15; 904, 60; diese werden verdammt 1076, 40; doch ist von f. Gegenwart ufm. nicht ex sensu z. urteilen 902, 57. 68; er wäre nicht nüt., wenn wir selbst gerecht wären 106, 10; ohne ihn kann d. Mensch wohl äußerl. Werke tun 156, 9; aber nicht d. Geseß erfüllen 140, 70; 156, 5. 9. 12. 14; 336, 73; ohne ihn nichts Gutes tun 50; 56; 122, 9; 336, 73; 880, 3. 18. 24; ohne ihn keine Bekehrg. 912, 83; f. Irrtümer d. Enthusiasten, die den G. Geist nicht durch d. Wort, sond. durch eig. Bereitung erwarten 310, 13; 788, 13; 880, 4. 80; ihn hätten die Propheten ohne d. mündl. Wort empfangen 496, 11; es sei zu scheiden zw. Wort und Geist 494, 3; er werde nicht durch das Wort gegeben 310, 13; 494, 3; die ihn einmal empfangen, könnten nicht sündigen 490, 42; ihn nicht durch Sünden verlieren 800, 19; ohne ihn könne man sich bekehren, Gottes Geb. halten 334, 68. 76; 788, 9; 908, 75; oder doch mitwirken 910, 77; er sei zu guten Werken nicht bonnütet 476, 10; er komme nur d. Bekehrten zu Hilfe 910, 76.

Falsche Vorstellungen d. Vernunft. Sie vermag d. Geheß einigerm. z. fassen 120, 7; 156, 9; 192; meint, daran genug z. haben z. Gerechtigkeit 120, 7; 164, 38. 108. 144; es halten zu können 478, 3; sieht bloß auf dessen äußere Werke 124; 130; 164, 38; das e. menschl. Wahn 158, 13. 16; 294, 45.

Vom Halten d. Gef. Zweck d. Geheßes. Daraus erkennt jeder seine Schwachheit u. f. Verderben 152, 103. 106; wie wenig wir d. Geheß erfüllen 158, 14; es macht uns alle z. Sündern 150, 103; 954, 10; klagt an und schreckt uns alle 130, 38; 150, 103; 156, 7. 46. 83. 136. 139. 149. 164. 174. 198; 212; 214; 258, 34. 48. 88; 860, 6. 32; verdammt alle bösen Lüfte 294, 45; wehrt d. groben Sünden 126, 22; offenbart u. straft d. Sünde 192, 134. 136; 262, 48. 53; 478, 1. 4 f.; 954, 11. 17 f.; den Unglauben 956, 19; 962, 1. 14; zeigt Gottes Zorn wider die Sünde 142, 79; 156, 7. 174; 478, 5; 954, 12. 14; richtet Zorn an 176, 83. 136. 139. 149; 210; 276, 88; schreckt, demütigt, verdammt d. Menschen, erweckt in ihm d. Verlangen nach Hilfe 152, 106; 170, 58; 478, 4; 800, 5. 7; 902, 54; 958, 23; zeigt uns unsf. Jammer 264, 53; ist e. Spiegel unsf. Unreinigkeit 968, 21; darum find die Menschen demf. feind 478, 2; d. bloße Predigt desf., ohne Christus, führt entweder zur Verneinung oder z. Verzeißung 954, 10; Luthers Erklärung dab. 954, 12.

Das Geheß macht also niemand gerecht vor Gott 130, 38. 40. 97 f. 103; 164, 36 ff. 56. 59. 61. 91. 106. 110. 156. 160. 171; 274, 79; 460, 4; dab. nicht Gnade, Verzeißung, Vergebung, Rechtfertigung, ew. Leben 130, 38. 42. 70; 168, 42. 59. 136. 173. 175 f. 243. 267; 422, 14; 460, 4; ihm nicht d. Ehre z. geben, die Christo gebührt 170, 61; 200, 159; Christus d. Herr d. Geheßes u. hat sich demf. freiwillig an unsf. Statt unterworfen 918, 15; d. Geheßes Ende 128, 30; 220, 251; 424, 15. 17; 960, 24; d. Gef. unsf. Zuchtmeister auf Christum 960, 24.

Gegen Wertgerechtigkeit. Die dab. gerecht w. wollen, haben Christum verloren 128, 30; fallen von ihm ab (274, 77); 316, 8; 422, 11; müssen d. ganze Geheß halten 164, 36; z. Gef. lehren zuriid, die d. Rechtfertigung d. Werken zuschreiben 152, 110; 182, 108; 272, 75.

Das Geheß muß man halten 158, 15; 208; das kann man nur dh. Christum 156, 5. 14. 63. 148 f. 178. 194. 267; 276, 86; ohne den es nichts nützt 198, 156; der es geistl. auslegt 802, 8; und uns v. f. Fluch erläßt 117, 58; 274, 80; 804, 2; 962, 4 f.; dh. d. G. Geist 140, 70; 156, 5. 9. 12. 14. 110. 172; 274, 82; dh. d. Glauben 132, 46. 114; 156, 3. 14. 38. 134. 149. 175; 274, 82; nach d. Wiebergeburt 132, 46; 156, 5. 54. 98. 135. 193. 194; u. Verzeißung 220, 247; 272, 76. 80 ff. 86 f.; ohne Zwang 190; Gott gibt es ins Herz 156, 2. 98; gibt, was er im Geheß gebietet 152, 106; es muß also z. Gv. hinzutommen 192, 136. 144. 160. 170. (172); 480, 7; 802, 7; 956, 15. 18. 24; dh. d. Glauben wird es nicht aufgehoben, sonb. aufgerichtet 156, 2; 170, 54. 148; 342, 92; aber auch dann dab. Gott nicht annehmen 170, 60. 187; inwiefern d. Gehorsam gegen dasf. rechtfertigt 170, 60; genügt d. Geheß, dann wäre d. Gv. nicht nüt. 272, 75; dann beständiger Zweifel 204, 180; 212; Geheß u. Gv. in d. Apologie 960.

Erreimer 202, 168 f.; 212; 788, 12; man könne mehr tun, als d. Geheß fordert 222, 256; 294, 45; erst d. Rechtfertigung dh. d. Gef., dann Verzeißung durch Christum 276, 85; d. Gef. sei zufrieden mit äußerer Gerechtigt. 294, 45; man könne ihm gehorchen ohne d. G. Geist 336, 76; es nach d. Wiebergeburt vollkommen halten 788, 12; 842, 25; 908, 75. 79; man solle es gar nicht treiben 796, 4; ob. nur bei d. Ungläubigen 806, 8.

Geheßeserfüllung 156; 162; 178, 98; was sie in sich begreift 158, 15; d. guten Früchte d. Gerechtfertigten 190, 131; wie weit wir (auch d. Wiebergeborenen) dab. entfernt find 158, 14. 43. 54. 58. 149. 169; Gef. Erf. ist d. Liebe 162, 26. 38. 60. 168. 173; dazu ist notwendig d. G. Geist 156, 5. 61; Glaube u. Wiebergeburt 156; 170, 53. 61. 93. 245; 222 f.; sie folgt d. Rechtfertigung 170, 61. 245; was daran fehlt, wird um d. Glaubens w. nicht zugerechnet 170, 56; sie verdient Lohn 220, 247; ist aber noch f. Gerechtigkeit 202, 169; kann an sich selbst Gott nicht gefallen 166, 39. 42. 45. 60. 247; d. Zorn Gottes nicht aufheben 206, 193; nicht Gnade, Gerechtigkeit, ew. Leben verdienen 166, 40 f. 55. 57; 214; 222; 276, 87; dann wäre d. Gv., Christus u. d. Glaube nicht nötig 180, 100. 110; 212.

Geheßesgerechtigkeit ist ein Gottesdienst durch Werke 134, 49; ist Liebe u. Werke 170, 60. 192; diese lehren die Widerjacher 182, 108; nicht die Evangelischen 206, 192.

Geheßeslehre ist scheinbarer (speciosior) als die d. Gv. 182, 109; dazu soll man d. Gv. nicht machen 804, 11; ist allein d. Sünde strafen 258, 34; jede and. Lehre v. d. Rechtfertigung als d. evangelische ist Gef. 206, 192. 256. 266; dab. wird d. Gv.
